Poetry. MEDITATION ON A SUMMER'S EVENING. The green and nature now is still. The gentle summer air Brings fragrance on its dewy wings...

Discussions. 'Tell her Aaron. Tell her all about it,' said a voice, speaking in his mind. 'Nonsense! She don't understand any thing about business. She can't help me,' he answered firmly. 'Tell your wife!' The words were in his mind, and would keep repeating themselves.

'Suppose you had a thousand dollars within the next two months, beyond what your business will give? 'That sum would make all safe for the two months. But where is the thousand dollars to come from, Betsy?' 'Desperate diseases require desperate remedies,' replied the brave little woman in a resolute way. 'I am not much afraid of the red flag.'

'What do you mean by the red flag?' 'Let us sell off our furniture at auction, and put the money in your business. It won't bring less than a thousand dollars; and it may bring two. My piano alone is worth three hundred and fifty. We can board a year or two; and when we get all right again return to house keeping.'

'We won't try that yet, Betsy,' said Mr. Little. 'But something must be done. The disease is threatening, and my first prescription will arrest its violence. I have something more to propose; it comes into my mind this instant;—after breaking up we will go home to mother's. You know she never wanted us to leave there. It won't cost us much more than one-half what it does now, taking rent into the account.'

'Of his want of more capital, and intention to make a partner of Lawrence,' 'What good would that have done?' 'It might have saved him from ruin as it did me.' 'You are mysterious, Little.' 'Am I? Well, in a few plain words. A year ago I was hard up for money in my business and thought of taking in Lawrence. I told my wife about it. She said, 'don't do it.' And I didn't; for her 'don't do it' was followed by suggestions as to his wife's extravagance that opened my eyes a little. I told her at the same time of my embarrassments and she set her bright little head to work and showed me the way to work out of them. Before this I always had a poor opinion of woman's within matters of business but now I say to every man in trouble: 'Tell your wife!'
