Wedding Occurs in Washington, D. C., Today

Distinguished Representatives Were Present

Washington, D. C., March 27—Not in a long time has the capital witnessed such an outpouring of distinguished representatives of official and resident society as filled Connecticut church, a modest little place of worship of the German Lutheran denomination, at the wedding this afternoon of the Countess Luise Alexandra von Bernstorff, daughter of the German ambassador and Countess von Bernstorff, and Count Raymond Pourtales, an attache of the German embassy.

The wedding was a notable event, both in social and official circles, for the guest list included the names of the President and Mrs. Taft, Vice President and Mrs. Sherman, the members of the cabinet, justices of the supreme court, senators and representatives, foreign diplomats and many other officials and their wives. Owing to the limited accommodations of the church only about 600 guests were invited to witness the marriage ceremony, but the wedding reception that followed at the German embassy was attended by several thousand persons well known in social circles in Washington, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and a number of other cities.

The little church was a bower of white lilacs, white roses and apple blossoms when the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, walked up the flower-marked aisle. The usual customs of a wedding in Germany were followed, with an adoption also of the forms in vogue in America. Following the custom of the fatherland, the bridegroom escorted the Countess von Bernstorff. The bride had no maid of honor, but was escorted to the altar by her father, preceded by her four bridesmaids: Miss Alys Meyer, daughter of the Secretary of the Navy; Miss Elsie Aldrich, daughter of ex-Senator and Mrs. Aldrich; Miss Cecelia May, who is soon to be the bride of Mr. Robert L. Bacon, and Miss Mary E. Southerland, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Southerland.

Instead of a best man there were four ushers for the bridegroom. They were Count Guenther von Bernstorff, brother of the bride; Jonkheer H. M. van Wendle, secretary of the Netherlands legation; Lord Eustace Percy, British attache, and Baron Hardenbrock, German attache. The four ushers chosen according to American custom were Count Elemer Pejacsevich, Austrian attache; Major von Herwarth, German military attache; Commander Reimann, German naval attache, and A. C. Horstmann, German attache.

The marriage ceremony was in accordance with the ritual of the German Lutheran church and was performed by the Rev. Paul A. Menthel, pastor of Connecticut church.

A coincidence of today's wedding of special interest in the United States is that the mother of the bride and the stepmother of the bridegroom, both were Americans. The wife of the German ambassador and mother of the bride was Miss Jeanne Luckemeyer of New York, while the stepmother of Count Pourtales was Miss Helen Barbey of New York city and Tuxedo.

The bride was born in Berlin twenty-two years ago and when she was eighteen she was given a brilliant debutante party at the diplomatic court in Cairo, where her father was then minister from Germany. Since coming to America in 1908 she has been extremely popular in Washington society life and noted for her beauty, her wit and social charm. In spite of her youth she is a thorough-going cosmopolitan and speaks several languages fluently.

The acquaintance of the bride and bridegroom began a year ago when Count Pourtales first came to Washington. This marked the Count's entry into the diplomatic service. Previously he had served six years in the Berlin Guards. The Count, who is twenty-eight years old, was born in Switzerland and educated in Munich. His father, Count Hermann Pourtales, was a soldier of the German army. His mother died in 1886 and two years later his father married Miss Barbey. Count Hermann Pourtales died in 1904 and his widow has since continued to live in Europe, spending her summers in Germany and her winters in Rome.

Cause For Rejoicing.

"I wonder why we always feel more cheerful when the early spring draws near?"

"I don't know," replied Mr. Sirius Stellar, "unless it's because by that time our holiday cigars are all smoked and our Christmas neckties are worn out."—Washington Star.
