Daily Empire.

The Mexican Empire—Vast Agricultural and Mineral Resources of the Country.

The Mexican Times of September 30 says: The statement is correct—it is official. The empire is divided into fifty departments, with an area of 712,850 square miles, and a population of 8,218,080 souls. It is more than three times as large as France, four times as large as Spain, and about thirty times the size of Holland and Belgium. It is in extent and internal resources a first-class empire.

No country on earth has so many natural advantages. Mexico is self-sustaining in every way. She raises her own breadstuffs of every kind; her beef and pork; her indigo, cochineal and vanilla; her wool, thread and cordage, and is now producing a large quantity of her cotton. She produces wines, aguardiente, mezcal and pulque, in the great abundance. In the northern departments, bordering on the Rio Grande, there is a fine grazing region. Here are immense herds of horses, cattle and sheep. The middle portion of the empire is more devoted to agriculture—to corn and wheat and rye and barley and oats. Here the Irish potato grows well.—The Pacific and Atlantic coasts are well adapted to sugar, coffee, tobacco and rice, and all the tropical plants and fruits. In the extreme south, in Yucatan, Campeche, Tehuacan, Tabasco and La Laguna, is the country for dye woods, mahogany, and the very best cacao. Here also grows in very great perfection the cocotnut and the chirimoya and every other inter-tropical fruit.—The lovers of natural history will find here, in their native forests, the noblest specimens of animated nature.

Oajaca produces cochineal and indigo in large quantities, while the highlands of Jalapa have monopolized for years the production of the celebrated "purgative drug."

The most valuable silver mines are situated in Tulancingo, Zacatecas, San Luis, Potosi, Guanajuato, Jalisco, Guerrero, Sonora, Sinaloa and Chihuahua. The copper mines of Chihuahua are said to be the richest in the world, and the pearls of Lower California have ever been in great demand. The silver mines of Real del Monte and Pachuca, in Tulancingo, are but a short distance from this city. They are the most valuable in the country, and are now yielding their owners large dividends. The mines of Guerrero are not only rich in silver and gold, but the streams abound in precious stones.

The mint of Mexico has coined from 1800 to 1860, in silver, $406,624,466, in gold, $6,175,544. How much of these precious metals was taken out of the country by Spanish Viceroy, by retrograde Presidents and Generals, and by that system of smuggling carried on so successfully for so many years, will never be made known.

This is a vast empire of mountains and valleys. The valleys are exceedingly rich and productive, while the mountains are filled with hidden treasure. Two-thirds of all the silver in circulation in the world was here taken from Mexico. If she is but true to herself—if her citizens will rise above the small bickerings of party, and rally around our republican Emperor and support him in his onward march of progress and improvement, this empire will soon be one of the richest and happiest portions of "God's green earth." Mexico is richer to-day than ever she was—New mines are daily discovered and worked with improved machinery. There are in her mountains ten thousand times more silver and gold than have been taken out. All she wants is energy—energy, energy.

A Funny Court Scene.

A funny scene, and one altogether in accordance with that chapter of the code regulating the duties of Justice's Court, not ten miles from Dubuque, the other day.

A man was brought before the Squire to be tried for assault and battery. Now, be it remembered that the said Squire has an ardent love for the "cryshter," and when his "love" is indulged at any extent, he is outspoken, and betrays the "leavings" in the trial of a case.

Well, the principal witness for the prosecution was called in the above trial. He proceeded to tell his story.

"I was going along the street," said he, "and I saw the plaintiff standing near the curb stone. The defendant came up to him, looked at him a second, and then struck him a square blow, and knocked him over."

"Bully for him! Bully for him!" shouted the Justice, in evident delight. "That's what I like to see, a square blow!"

The counsel and spectators were amazed, and sat looking at the delighted Justice like statues; then three or four of them burst into a laugh.

"Order in Court," cried the Squire. "This Court must be respected in proper manner.—Proceed with your case, gentlemen."

"Well, but your Honor," said the counsel for the prosecution, "I'd like to know what kind of a proceeding this is. How can we try this case under such circumstances? Your Honor, show—"

"Order in the Court," roared the Squire.—"Gentlemen, proceed with your case. I'm glad it was a square blow he struck him!" he continued, ending the sentence in a hearty laugh.

"Of course the prosecution 'rested' here, and well they might. The 'square blow' had settled their case in that Court. The defense offered their testimony, and the Justice dismissed the case.

As General Butler has had something to say about the sort of a monument he would like, possibly the following quotation may, in view of his cotton, sugar, and silver spoons 'speculations' in New Orleans, be as fitting as anything for the inscription: "Steal from the world, and not a stone tell where I lie."

Transparent Houses.

In the vicinity of Surprise Valley (Nevada) is an extensive quarry of gypsum, perfectly crystallized, and as transparent as brooks of ice from the clear est pond. This rock naturally breaks in perfect squares, and without cutting can be used for building purposes. Several houses will soon be erected of this material, and it is thought that no windows will admit light, as the blocks of gypsum will admit light. A building constructed of this material would certainly present a splendid and fairy-like appearance.

The recent earthquake in San Francisco has occasioned apprehension and alarm, not only from its violence, but from the disagreeable fact, which the discussion of the calamity has revived, that California has been subject in times past to similar visitations. The ancient builders and herdsmen who crossed its sandy hills and valleys often found the earth unaccountably quaking beneath their feet. It is possible that San Francisco may witness the painful scenes which have been frequently observed in Acapulco, Mazatlan, and other towns along the coast washed by the same waters. The late earthquake seems to have been even more severe than was reported by the first accounts. Massive structures were made temporarily useless, and great fissures were made along portions of the waterfront, which had been converted into sites for buildings, apparently as solid and immovable as the earth itself.
