JOHNNY'S DEBUT.

He Thought He Had Learned His Lesson Thoroughly.

A seven-year-old orator made his debut in front of a large audience the other night at a West Side club. His deluded but loving family who had egged him on to this sacrifice were mostly with him in the dressing room; they wanted to be sure that his bangs did not fall over his eyes and obstruct the view of his mother, father, aunts, uncles and cousins in reserved seats directly in front.

"Now, Johnny," said his mother, "be sure you make a nice bow."
"You bet I will," said Johnny, with a swagger.

"And let your hands fall easily by your side, like this," and his father struck an attitude.

"Of course," said Johnny.

"Are you sure you know your piece?" asked his sister.

"Yep," said Johnny, and he recited the first two lines--

"I wish I had a little dog,
To put him on the head."

"That's right. He'll do splendidly," remarked his mother. "You'll go on in a minute now, and we must get into our seats. Don't you be scared a bit, Johnny."

"Whoot thared?" asked Johnny, who began to feel a sinking of the knees, while his heart began to rise until it was in his mouth, and then somebody was pushing him forward, and he saw a lot of faces, not one of which he had ever seen before, and it was lighter than any electric search-light he had ever seen. "Speak up now," said the manager. "Make your bow and say your piece."

Johnny made his bow and the audience applauded, but he had difficulty in finding his tongue. His hands hung down as his father had suggested, making him look like a little wooden man, and when he forgot and stuffed them into his pockets the audience applauded again. The manager took this opportunity for a stage whisper: "Speak up, now," and he began the first line. Then Johnny said in a strange, hoarse voice:

"I wish I had a little pat,
To dog him on the head."

Roars of laughter. Frantic demonstrations on the part of Johnny's family. He began again:

"I wish I had a little pat,
To head him on the dog."

His father rose in his seat. That added to Johnny's confusion. Again the brave boy essayed:

"I wish I had a little dog,
To head him on the pat."

Then a weary family took Johnny by the hand and led him home.—Detroit News Tribune.
