INSULTS TO ROYALTY.

Some of the Things That Constitute Less Majesty in England. Many people think that less majesty—giving insult to royalty—is not a crime in Great Britain. The English statute books, however, contain many penalties for such offenses. Placing a postage stamp on a letter upside down is a punishable offense, as is also the defacement of a coin bearing the royal image. This is insulting the king's effigy. Private individuals may not raise the royal standard over their dwellings. This is the emblem of the royal authority to be displayed only where the king is present. While an agitator may talk against royalty in the abstract as much as he chooses, contemptuous or insulting personal references to the reigning sovereign open the offender to a heavy fine and imprisonment. The slightest slap upon the face of the king or queen—or any other part of the anatomy, for that matter—is punishable with the death penalty. In the reign of Queen Victoria a Lieutenant Page struck her across the face with his cane. He was sentenced to death, but the queen commuted his sentence. It is likewise a crime to bring the uniform of the sovereign into contempt. To garb a low comedian or a villain of the stage in a discarded uniform of the army or the navy is sufficient to bring heavy censure from the government. For this reason theatrical managers usually see to it that the uniforms worn are not exactly copies of the real things.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHT.

The Most Brilliant Illumination is Not Always the Best. A writer in an engineering magazine offers some disconcerting information on the subject of illumination, disconcerting because the reader will probably find that he has been, innocently enough, following a course of procedure there described as injurious. For instance, in the case of eye strain he may have felt that even the dim light by which he worked was too strong, and so turned down the light, thus increasing the difficulty, or, what is more likely to be the case, when the strain has been caused by too brilliant illumination he fancied that what is needed is stronger light and so increases it. Overstrain from too bright a light is said to manifest itself by an itching sensation in the eyeballs, with the tendency to rub the eyes for relief. The proper course, then, is to see that the light is more perfectly diffused or softened and that it falls in the right direction. After these precautions have been taken it is worth while to try a smaller quantity of light, this trial to continue long enough in time for the eyes to become fully adjusted to the change. The value of illumination is not to be judged by the apparent brightness of the lights when looked at directly—the brighter the light the better—but by the effect on the object to be looked at, and the most desirable effect, so far as the eyes are concerned, is not always produced by the most brilliant lights.—Indianapolis Star.

Set the Pace. Young Mabel had a habit when soup was served at the table of mashing her crackers or bread in it until it was a great mess. Her mother made many efforts to have her correct this strictly primeval habit.

One day there was to be company at the table, and the mother said: "Now, Mabel, Mrs. Brown is to dine with us tonight, and I want you to act at the table just as nicely as she does. Please don't 'mash' your soup." Mabel promised faithfully to follow the example set by Mrs. Brown, and the dinner opened with every promise of a fine time. However, Mabel was using a pair of very sharp eyes on Mrs. Brown and in an instant blurted forth at the top of her voice: "Oh, mamma, Mrs. Brown is 'mashing' May!"

Had Tried Electricity. A bipedevant gentleman attempted to converse with the motherly old lady who sat next to him in the railway carriage. He discovered that she was very deaf, and the conversation was established by shouting. "You are very deaf, aren't you, madam?" ultimately believed he of the benevolence. "I am so," was the reply, "and haven't been able to do a thing for it." "Have you ever tried electricity?" shouted the kind-hearted man. "Yes," she said, looking vigorously, "I was struck by lightning last summer."—London Graphic.

MILLS ADDITION LOTS are Advancing in Value

When blocks in Mills Addition were offered at bargain prices a number of shrewd investors bought; since that time values have increased materially. These Lots are Bargain Buys at present prices, and there is every reason to anticipate an advance in prices. Remember these lots are FIFTY feet in width and ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY FEET deep—more than double the area of most town lots offered to investors.

Every good book seem to have been written especially for the man or woman who is reading it. Every good advertisement will have something of this quality. See what of the store-ads. today appeals to you most directly.

PUBLICITY THE PRICE OF SUCCESS There is a right way to do things. There is a large amount of profitable business to be secured by the right kind of advertising without increasing the fixed expenses. The advertiser, in the preparation of copy, must consider what will appeal to the interest from the reader's or the customer's point of view. It will not do simply to put down what seems to the advertiser to be interesting, without putting it to the test of whether it will be so to the public as well. It must contain information that the public would either like to get at, or which they could be interested in by a suggestion in the shape of a good striking headline. What the public are after principally is the goods at right prices, so that good descriptions should be included in nearly every ad. Prices are invariably of interest to the customer, and, whether the method is reliable or not, form one of the principal means of judging of the desirability of the goods.
