How a Flea Jumps.
It is said that a flea leaps 200 times its height, and while it usually does land on its feet, it often falls, especially when it falls on a perfectly smooth surface where the claws can get only a slight hold. A flea has six legs, whose great length and bulk make them so heavy that they must be a great help in keeping their owner right side up when it makes one of these gigantic jumps, and when it lands upside down or in some other way its ability to kick is so great that not more than one wriggle is needed to set things right. A flea's wings are mere scales and of no use; but, small and worthless as they are, they tell the entomologist something about the proper classification of the insect. To the flea itself they have no value.

An Amusing Slip.
A well known temperance lecturer who is an ardent advocate of prohibiting the public sale of liquors was becoming dramatic over the ideal conditions prevailing in a certain prohibition town.
"I am sure all who are present will agree with me," he concluded, sinking his voice to an impressive whisper, "when I tell you that during a stay of over two months I saw but one drunken man—a most refreshing sight!"—Buffalo Times.

Refined It.
A little girl was told by her mother that under no circumstances must she use the word "nigger," as it was offensive to the colored people. The next day at school she was requested to read aloud about a niggardy man, and she astonished the teacher by reading in this wise: "Once upon a time there was a very negrogardy man," etc.

Rely upon it that the man who does not worthily estimate his own dead forefathers will himself do very little to add credit or do honor to his country.—William E. Gladstone.

LOOTING AT PEKING.

A Chinaman's Story of the Pillage in the City in 1900.
One of the rules of war passed by the former conference at The Hague formally forbade pillage. William T. Stead tells how he questioned a Chinaman who was present at the relief of the legations in Peking in 1900. In reply to Mr. Stead's question the man said: "Every one looted. But everybody did not loot everything. Each had his special field of pillage. The Japanese, for instance, looted only the rich people and places where there was much silver. They looted from the public treasury and sent their plunder to Tokyo. The German poor fellows, came late, and there was nothing left for them to loot but furniture." "But did all the contingents pillage?" asked Mr. Stead.
"The Americans were the best. They did not pillage. General Chaffee threatened to shoot any one who did. So they only took watches from people in the streets. The Cossacks and the sepoys were the worst. But everybody helped themselves."
"Then you had to deal with the realities without the rules of war?"
"No rules," he said, "only realities. Bad realities too. After the expeditionary force entered Peking I helped to bury the dead who lay in the streets. We buried 5,000, 8,500 of whom were women."
"Women killed by shells or in the fighting?"
"No. More than half had committed suicide. They could not live for shame of their fate."
"Listen," Mr. Stead remarked, "to article 56: 'The honor and rights of the family, the life of individuals and private property, ought to be respected. Private property cannot be confiscated.' Was no one punished for these crimes?" The Chinaman replied: "How could any be punished when all were guilty? When we complained to the officers they replied if we would bring evidence to prove they would punish." "But was it any better with the governments?" "Just the same. They took what they wanted. Italy took valuable tablets historically interesting. Germany took astronomical instruments given by Jesuits hundreds of years ago. They are now in Potsdam."
"Yes," said Mr. Stead. "I saw the great bronze globe when the emperor received the British journalists. Are you not going to ask for it to be returned?" "No," answered the Chinaman; "we will get others. Let them keep it—for their shame!" "These new rules about not compelling the natives of an invaded country to help their invaders—were your people compelled to work?" "One of the princes of the imperial house was done to death by being compelled to work in the stables of the Italians. They made all work."—Chicago News.

The Fatal Ham Sandwich.
Public confidence in the ham sandwich, that conspicuous feature of railway restaurant fare, has been steadily undermined during the last few years and has lately received a new and severe blow.

The fact that bread is often made of flour containing alum, lime and other unpalatable minerals first excited suspicion, which later revelations as to the nature and wide use of oleomargarine enhanced. Then vague alarm was aroused by the discovery that a serious danger might lurk in the tender ham.
Now comes the startling announcement that some mustards are often adulterated with naphthal yellow, which is not only a poison, but a dangerous explosive also. The case against the sandwich, therefore, seems to be complete.
Having forfeited all claims to popular trust and affection, it should be consigned to the realms of bombs, infernal machines and other devices of conspirators.—What to Eat.

Telephone Booths and Germs.
Public telephone booths are said by a physician to be "stagnatory well designed for the capture and growth of pathogenic organisms," being carefully closed, padded and kept almost air tight. He writes: "Sunshine and fresh air seldom can reach the interior, while of course no attempt is made to keep them aired or ventilated, because any provision for securing ventilation is calculated to make difficult the hearing of the message. The telephone call station may be described, in fact, as a bacteriological box in which pathogenic and other organisms are carefully nursed. Infection of the imprisoned air must at all events be constantly taking place, and this only too readily spreads whenever the opportunity arises. Caller after caller thus either may infect or receive infection so long as no steps are taken to purify the air within the station."—Chicago News.

Plats and Notices.
In an office in the Wall street district the following notice has hung in a conspicuous place for several weeks. It is written in English, German and French under the headlines "Warning," "Habet Acht" and "Avertissement": "Do you contemplate renting an apartment—a flat? If so, be warned, and look at the place at night after you have determined to rent it. Do not look—you did that in the daytime—but listen. Listen for the sound of the pump. If you hear it don't take the flat, because you will regret it. The pump will destroy your peace, it will get on your nerves, it will rob your home of all attraction, and life will be a burden. If your prospective landlord has told you about the fine ice plant, which will save you the price of ice, listen for the ice machine music. Take heed! Be warned! Listen!"—New York Tribune.
