The Champion Absentminded Man.
 A very absentminded professional man, with offices in a Chestnut street building, came downtown the other day and discovered that he had left his keys at home. The superintendent of the building let the absentminded man into his office, but he was still as bad off as ever. He could not get into his desk or at his safe. He pondered a little while over his dilemma, then he decided to return home for the keys. "Why not send a messenger boy after the keys?" was the thought that struck him, but that was immediately put out of the question by another thought to the effect that the boy would not be able to get in the house in case the absentminded man's wife had left home. "That's right; I must go myself," decided the troubled man, and home he went, arriving at the very door of his house before it dawned upon him that he without his keys was as bad off as a messenger boy, and the poor man's wife had gone out all right. "Oh, hang it anyway," said the absentminded man, "I ought to have telephoned her to wait for me! Why didn't I do that? Well, I will go right back to the office and phone." And he did. He phoned and phoned for some time before he could understand why his wife did not answer; then he gave up work for the day—Philadelphia Record.

Turning the Tables.
 When E. L. Godkin was editor of the New York Evening Post he was supposed by many to lack a sense of humor, but those in his employ who stood close to him knew better. One morning he sent for his young city editor. "Last night," said Mr. Godkin, "I read in the Post an account of the suicide of a boy. Your news paragraph reported as the notice that the boy was being resisted at home in a premature inclination to marry. Mr. Blank, can you imagine how that father felt when you accused him for what was no doubt done in a sense of loving duty of being the cause of the death of his child?" The young editor stammered an apology. "Thank you for your explanation," said Godkin. "But," he went on in a more decided tone, "if anything like that ever happens again I give you fair warning, sir, that I will leave this paper! I will not work for a paper that says things so cruel!"—Success Magazine.

When Britain Fought For an Ear.
 Perhaps the most extraordinary example of Britain going to war for "no reason at all" occurred in the reign of George II. One Robert Jenkins, an English merchant-seaman, trading from Jamaica, arriving in England in 1788, reported that the ship had been boarded by the Spanish coast guards and that, though no proof of smuggling had been found, he had been tortured and his ear torn off. All England flew into an uproar. "Jenkins' ear" divided parties and shook Walpole's ministry itself. The house of commons sent for Jenkins, and he was told to bring his ear with him. The incident grew into a crisis, though Walpole did his best to persuade people to keep their heads, but the popular indignation was so great that the next year the government was compelled to declare war against Spain.—Pearson's.

The Parish Top.
 Once in England top whipping was practically ordered by law. There was a huge top formerly provided in every village to be whipped in frosty weather that the peasants might be kept warm by the exercise and out of mischief while they could not work. Shakespeare in "Twelfth Night" says, "His brains turn like a parish top." Ben Jonson in "New Inn" writes, "He spins like a parish top," and Beaumont and Fletcher have "dances like a town top and reels and hobbles." Evelyn, the diarist, speaking of the uses of willow wood, says that it was ordered that "the great town tops should be made thereof."

Is German as Bad as This?
 John Ruskin was caustic in his utterances about the German language. In "Letters of Dr. John Brown" Ruskin is thus quoted: "German isn't a 'language' at all, but only a 'throatage' or 'gutturage'—a mode of human expression learned chiefly of wolves and bears, with half of the things it calls words stitched in the middle like wasps and ants or ass panthers, and letters scratched out when people were mostly drunk, so that they didn't know the tops from the bottoms of them."

In Wrong.
 "Your husband is greatly in need of exercise," said the doctor. "He's in doors too much. He'll have to get out more." "Out more?" exclaimed the wife. "He's been out every night this week. That's what's the matter with him." Realizing that he was in the wrong, the doctor left a prescription and promised to call later.—St. Louis Republic.

The Vote That Counted.
 "And what was your family's decision?" "Practically unanimous in my favor," answered the young lawyer. "mother voting aye and father dissenting."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

His School.
 "Have you a college diploma?" "No, but I have several mining stock certificates that I might frame and hang up as evidence that I have been through the school of experience."—Exchange.

The habit of looking at the best side of every event is worth more than a thousand a year.—Johnson.

The Poor Hungry Fish.
 "Here is an interesting thing that happened last summer to a friend and myself," said a New Yorker. "We had gone on a fishing trip in a rowboat, but it seemed that either all the fish were at another place or were not hungry. We decided if those fish were not hungry we were. We had taken our lunch, as wise fishermen will, and in order to keep the bread as fresh as possible had left it in loaf form. My friend asked me to pass it to him, and in doing so the loaf of bread went overboard. We made out the best we could without the bread and later rowed to another place to fish. On our way back we passed the place where we lost our bread. Then we saw the sight of our lives. On each side of the loaf of bread stood a big fish, and for as far as we could see there was a great line of small fish. We wondered what it was and then the thought dawned on us—those fish had formed a 'bread line' and the two large fish were dealing out the bread. After that we didn't have the heart to try to catch any of those poor, hungry fish."

A Bride With Some Good Points.
 Some years ago in an agricultural district in England there lived a farmer who wanted to sell one of his cows. There was not at that time a weekly paper in which he could advertise, so he resolved to follow a local custom and ask the vicar of the parish when giving out his notices at church to advertise the cow. "Yes, farmer," said the vicar, "I should be willing to oblige you, but you don't attend my church." Presently, however, they struck a bargain that the vicar should advertise the cow, and the man in return promised to go to church. Now, unfortunately the man was deaf, and on the Sunday following when the vicar gave out the banns of marriage between Joseph Soand-so, bachelor, and Sarah Soand-so, spinster, the farmer took it for granted that the vicar was giving out particulars of his cow and shouted out. "You might as well say, while you are about it that she is a most gentle creature and entirely free from vice."—Stray Stories.

Where Red Hair is Disliked.
 In Cornwall, particularly the Land's End district, it is not advisable to dub a person "a red haired Dane," though in most parts of England, especially inland, the expression would as likely be regarded as simply frivolous. At a police court case heard in 1807 at Penzance town hall it came out in evidence that the defendant had called the complainant "a red haired Dane," and this led to an assault. The strong repugnance of Cornwallmen to be dubbed by this strange appellation is as strong as ever. The Celtic nations hated the Danes and were always fighting them. And not only in Cornwall, but also all along our coasts, where the Danes or Norsemen made their ravages, this deep rooted prejudice against people with red hair, "red headed," more or less remains ingrained in the national character.—J. Harris Stone in "The English Illustrated."

Meat Versus Song.
 The great tenor's lunch consisted of a cheese omelet, asparagus, fruit and an ice. "No meat?" said the reporter. "As little meat as possible," the tenor replied. "Meat kills song. The nightingale, the thrush and lark are grain eaters, and their song is sweet. The carnivorous birds, the crow, etc., only croak. And in countries that go in for excessive meat eating—England, for instance—there are few good voices, while in the more vegetarian countries, such as Italy, fine singers abound. Song birds are vegetarian," he concluded. "Carnivorous birds croak."—New York Press.

Where Water Means Life.
 As illustrating the scarcity of water in some parts of Australia and the high value set upon it, I would draw attention to the case of three Afghans who were murdered in West Australia. Water was scarce, and yet these three orientals washed themselves in a road hole—the sole source of supply—adjoining a selector's homestead. In a fury he shot the three of them, and at his subsequent trial the jury unanimously acquitted him.—Wide World Magazine.

His Great Fault.
 "Yes," said the would be author. "I've taken a house in the country, but it will be necessary for me to engage a gardener. There's quite a plot of ground around the house; too much for me to handle." "Yes," replied Crittiek, "you never could handle a plot, could you?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

All Pretty.
 A rash paper announced for its columns a forthcoming story, entitled "The Prettiest Girl in the Town." A hundred young ladies immediately sent post cards warning the editor not to use their real names.—London Globe.

Brevity.
 "Too many words are wearisome," said Kwoter. "Brevity is the soul of wit." "Not always," replied the observer; "but, in any event, it is always commendable."—Philadelphia Press.

Twenty and Twenty-two.
 What is the difference between twenty and twenty eleven? None whatever. Don't you see that twice ten makes twenty and twice eleven makes twenty-two (too)?

The strongest things are in danger from the weakest.—Boswell.

Setwit and Between.
 Oh, yes, it's great to be alive! Not! In that half and half season When it isn't spring, It isn't summer, It isn't winter, Nor anything else, Not even nothing; When the weather, A day ahead, Is always a guessing contest, With the dead certainty That you'll guess wrong Through you guess Both ways And then split the difference, One day ahead, The overcoat is a man's best friend, Next day It's the panama hat, Followed in turn By the quick shift Back to the fur, The only way To play safe Is to have a handy man Along With a push cart Filled with all varieties of wardrobe, So that a quick shift Can be made. And then A man must be A trained athlete To keep up with the weather Changes. O spring, You are a beauty Sometimes, And then again Words fall, And nothing short of a steam hammer Can do justice To the occasion.
