JAPAN IS TO PLAY VERY CAUTIOUSLY AT PARLEY

BY WEBSTER K. NOLAN, International News Service Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Foresadowing astuteness with which the delegates of Japan will conduct themselves at the disarmament conference, the first step—the selection of the three men to represent the Nipponese government—shows a marked desire upon the part of Japan to play a cautious hand at the Round Table of the Nations.

There is Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, the Colonel House of the Japanese government. Closest of all the statesmen to the emperor, looked upon generally as a man above party, for twenty-odd years president of the house of peers, Prince Tokugawa stands as the confident of state secrets and the mysterious personage from whom has often come "the last word."

Brains of Cabinet.
There is Rear Admiral Tomosaburo Kato, the "brains" of the Japanese cabinet and navy. Ministry has superseded ministry and parties have supplanted parties for more than a decade in Japan, but the minister for the navy Rear Admiral Tomosaburo Kato retains the portfolio of his office. He shares, with an exclusive few, the fine light of being a man above party. In Japan none is held comparable to Kato in point of knowledge on things affecting naval construction and naval armament.

There is Baron Kijuro Shidehara, the Japanese ambassador to the United States, the "trained seal" of the Japanese diplomatic service. A man who has had nothing to do with home politics, a statesman seemingly marked for every high diplomatic honor his government can bestow. A keen observer of men and events in the Occidental world, Baron Shidehara is the most trusted envoy of Japan. Of the three delegates of Japan to the disarmament conference Baron Shidehara is considered the delegate best versed in the systems and temperaments of the western nations. He has long been the most prominent Japanese figure in European and American diplomatic circles.

Few Above Suspicion.
In Japan, where of late years inter-eclectic political warfare has been securing to itself the greater portion of the national stage, only a handful of men are looked upon without suspicion. There are those who want to raise the standard of living and labor, others who want war, still others who seek peace at any price, groups agitating for the displacement of monarchism and the substitution of a broader policy of representation. There are conservatives and ultra-radicals. The emperor, who is credited with the appointment of the three delegates to the arms parley, sought to name men above all this play of politics, immune alike to the waving of red flags and the agitation for peace at any price—men who know the value of the soft word and the effectiveness of silence.

Prince Tokugawa at the age of 20 years went to England, where he spent five years in study, 1877-1882. He returned to Japan and pursued his studies further. In 1890 he was appointed a member of house of peers and soon thereafter was elected president of the house of peers, an honorary office. In the latter office Prince Tokugawa had a hand in the formation of ministries and he won to himself the confidence of the emperor which confidence he has never lost. In 1910, while president of the house of peers, Prince Tokugawa visited America on a pleasure tour and revisited his former haunts in England. He received the title of prince in July, 1884.

Rear Admiral Tomosaburo Kato was born on February 22, 1861. He participated in the great naval engagement off the Tushima coast, when the Japanese first fleet sent the Russian sea-hounds to the bottom. He took part in the capture of Port Arthur. Later he became vice minister for the navy, soon thereafter succeeding to the post of minister for the navy which portfolio he has never relinquished.

Baron Kijuro Shidehara was born in August, 1872 and has spent almost the whole of his life in the diplomatic service. He was sent to the embassy in London as a secretary. In 1902 he was assigned to the Washington embassy as counselor. He was then appointed Japanese minister to the Netherlands. In 1915 he was called home and given the portfolio of vice minister for foreign affairs. In 1919 he was named ambassador to the United States.

Dear Officest:
A young thing only 18 years old refused a dinner invitation and gave as the reason for her refusal, "O, he's the goofiest guy." Upon my request for elucidation, she replied, "Just a mutt, a boob, a goof."

What did she mean?

PHILADELPHIA IS BIG 'NATIONAL RESERVOIR'

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 25.—(U. S. S.)—This city is known in "wet" circles as one of the "national reservoirs" of the bootlegging industry. Price lists of booze are freely circulated and delivery can be obtained within three or four days for case goods, and even less for small quantities. Drinks can be purchased in almost any saloon and the restaurants do a fair business. Motor-truck fleets of the liquor syndicates arrive and depart with great regularity. The seizures made by the enforcement officials are regarded as trivial by those acquainted with the situation. A shake-up of the local prohibition bureau has been ordered from Washington.

Question: Why do editors call it the labor situation? All the labor we know says there's no situation to be had.

We read a news dispatch yesterday, to-wit: "Ten Negro Families Flee From Fire in Woodpile."

Disillusionment is very bitter. Somebody told us there was only one gent in there, and we believed him.

Didja hear this one about the Irish captain, who was exhorting his company before the battle: "And, me men, will ye fight or will ye run?" Chorus: "We will!" "Ye will what?" "We will not!" "Ah—I knew ye would!"

How Much How Little

How much more than the bare mechanism of an automobile do you get when you buy a car? The real value of any automobile lies in performance, not in design or material.

The manufacturer furnishes the car. The good dealer guarantees its performance.

How much more you get than merely a car depends upon your selection of the dealer.

There is much more than a stock of automobiles in our establishment.
