

ENGAGEMENT-RING STYLES CHANGE LIKE MILADY'S HAT

Up-to-Date Miss Wants None of Old Setting That Was Pride of Grandma and Her Fiance Years Ago

There was a time when an engagement ring was a modest little stone set high on a thin band of gold. But alas, the modest little stone is a thing of the past, as is the modest little wearer.

Our grandmothers were satisfied with a tiny bit of sparkle, and moved their hands about that it might show, but not so with the women of today. The conventional Tiffany setting is almost entirely out of use, say jewelers here. There is an occasional call for one to be worn by a conservative miss, but the demand is very small.

Clear, sparkling stones are set in the most exquisitely carved bands of platinum. The fancy platinum and diamond rings, a large stone surrounded by smaller ones, are not used so much as engagement rings, although many are bought for that purpose.

A narrow band of the platinum supports a stone which is set rather high, but in no way resembles the once fashionable Tiffany setting. The change was gradual and hardly noticed at first. In the beginning, the old-fashioned setting had prongs of platinum. They were light in color and brought out the beauty of the stone. Besides, the platinum tips were more practical, as they held better.

And then an ingenious mind devised the plan of a different type of engagement ring, and the new style caught on by storm. Out of nowhere sprang the new rings, and many an ingenuous wisp of hair is tucked into place by the left land of the fortunate wearer of a bit of diamond and platinum expensiveness. Countless women have taken their rings with an old-fashioned setting to the jewelry stores and had them reset. With a large stone already in a woman's possession, she finds it is not so costly to have a ring like her daughter's. There are some women who for sentimental reasons would not have reset the rings their husbands gave them years ago, but the average woman wishes to be of the mode, be it to change the position of the trimming of her hat or the style of her engagement ring.
