

BRAVEST DEEDS OF WAR.

Recollections of Episodes of Heroism by Land and Sea.

Turning Contributions From Major T. P. McElrath, Lieutenant Colonel G. R. McCabe, and Captain W. Drake and T. W. Brooke—Ninth Number of a Hoitable Series.

It is proposed in the series of papers, of which the following forms the sixth number to give to the public for the first time...

TOLD BY MAJOR THOMAS P. McELRATH.

The captain of the battery of the Fifth U. S. Artillery in which I served as lieutenant...

TOLD BY CAPTAIN T. W. BROOKE.

This was a bold and striking and one worthy the best of our best soldiers...

TOLD BY MAJOR THOMAS P. McELRATH.

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

TOLD BY CAPTAIN W. DRAKE, A. D. C.

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

TOLD BY LT. COLONEL G. R. McCABE.

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

shoulders, showed the direction of his sympathies and the reason for his visit to these parts.

The young man after some hesitation, said his name was Singleton, but beyond that he would not talk.

The circumstances of his capture and the fact that he had a good many thousand possession caps in his possession...

As we were some eight miles from the headquarters of the Provost-Marshal of the army...

It was in my special training and when dinner was served I ordered that the man to give all he would eat...

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

A CHAT WITH G. A. GROW.

Return to Congress of One of the Great Men of the Past.

His Early Life and How He Became the Successor of David Wilcox—Interesting Recollections of the Leading Statesmen and Orators of the Anti-Slavery Period—Passage of the Homestead Law.

GLENSIDE, PA., March 9, 1894.—An interview with the most affable of American statesmen, Galusha A. Grow...

This was a bold and striking and one worthy the best of our best soldiers...

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

A CHAT WITH G. A. GROW.

Return to Congress of One of the Great Men of the Past.

His Early Life and How He Became the Successor of David Wilcox—Interesting Recollections of the Leading Statesmen and Orators of the Anti-Slavery Period—Passage of the Homestead Law.

GLENSIDE, PA., March 9, 1894.—An interview with the most affable of American statesmen, Galusha A. Grow...

This was a bold and striking and one worthy the best of our best soldiers...

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

A CHAT WITH G. A. GROW.

Return to Congress of One of the Great Men of the Past.

His Early Life and How He Became the Successor of David Wilcox—Interesting Recollections of the Leading Statesmen and Orators of the Anti-Slavery Period—Passage of the Homestead Law.

GLENSIDE, PA., March 9, 1894.—An interview with the most affable of American statesmen, Galusha A. Grow...

This was a bold and striking and one worthy the best of our best soldiers...

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

A CHAT WITH G. A. GROW.

Return to Congress of One of the Great Men of the Past.

His Early Life and How He Became the Successor of David Wilcox—Interesting Recollections of the Leading Statesmen and Orators of the Anti-Slavery Period—Passage of the Homestead Law.

GLENSIDE, PA., March 9, 1894.—An interview with the most affable of American statesmen, Galusha A. Grow...

This was a bold and striking and one worthy the best of our best soldiers...

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

A CHAT WITH G. A. GROW.

Return to Congress of One of the Great Men of the Past.

His Early Life and How He Became the Successor of David Wilcox—Interesting Recollections of the Leading Statesmen and Orators of the Anti-Slavery Period—Passage of the Homestead Law.

GLENSIDE, PA., March 9, 1894.—An interview with the most affable of American statesmen, Galusha A. Grow...

This was a bold and striking and one worthy the best of our best soldiers...

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

GALUSHA A. GROW, FROM HIS LATEST PHOTOGRAPH.

twelve years he remained in Congress. There was no important measure introduced during his period of service that did not feel the influence of his voice and vote...

lasted credit it is to be said that the position which he took on the slave question—the only just and righteous one—steadily maintained during his public career...

"GENTLEMEN, I SALUTE YOU."

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

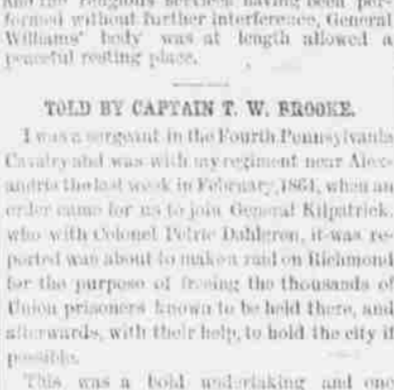

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

"GENTLEMEN, I SALUTE YOU."

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

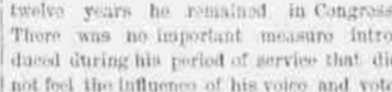

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

One evening, it was in mid-June and about a month after the siege began...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

I was then a captain attached to a heavy detail that was sent down the Big Black to watch the only point to the east...

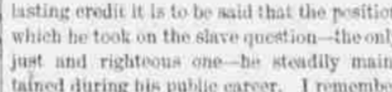

"GENTLEMEN, I SALUTE YOU."

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

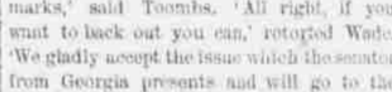

"GENTLEMEN, I SALUTE YOU."

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

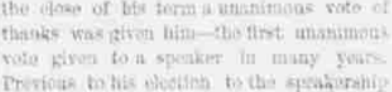

"GENTLEMEN, I SALUTE YOU."

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.

"GENTLEMEN, I SALUTE YOU."

As I can forward the packets begun to fire in the direction of the river...

I was on duty in New Orleans as aide-de-camp at the headquarters of General Butler...

It was during the Vicksburg campaign, and not long before the termination of that memorable siege.