One of our real Yankee friends sends us a note taking us to task for saying that we, as a native of eastern Indiana, which was mainly settled by Southern people, are not a Yankee in the proper sense of the term. Our friend from the tenor of his note, evidently infers that we made this statement to avoid the supposed stigma which at the South rests upon the name Yankee. How he or any one else who knows us could have reached such a conclusion is something wonderful. We made the statement we did simply because we like to see things called by their right names, and we know of nothing more egregiously silly than to style the people of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois (save the northern portion of said States), Yankees. But as a term of reproach applied to everybody who chanted to be born north of Mason's and Dixon's line, we unhesitatingly and unqualifiedly accept the name. Having rested under it here for nearly a dozen years, we ought by this time to be pretty well used to it.

The truth is, however, that it is high time for a suspension of sectional prejudices of this sort, more especially since the whole country is again more united than ever before since the war, or in fact, as we believe, for a good while previous. For our own part we long since learned to estimate people by their character and merits, rather than by the place of their birth or other adventitious circumstances. You will find but little of such prejudices among educated and traveled people, and as the people of the North and South advance in enlightenment and a better acquaintance with each other, we may expect to find them giving place to mutual respect and fraternal feeling.

See prospectus of Courier-Journal and notice of our clubbing rates with it.

The Kyle News is out under its new management. The publication day is changed to Saturday.

Work was begun on the new Court House fence over a week ago, but has been suspended because of the bad weather. The material is on the ground.

Quite respectable winter weather has prevailed ever since our last issue. On Sunday night the rain became a sleet, which continued during the next three days. Our evergreen woods showing through it made quite a fairy scene. The weight was such as to break down large limbs from the trees. It was a scene the like of which we have never beheld save once before in Texas.

The Blanco News, noticing the crying want of another newspaper here as lately heralded abroad through leading dailies, and noticed in our columns, thinks there may be actually "room for two," and adds: "Blanco supports two newspapers, why could not San Marcos?" Well, perhaps she might—about as well. The News further says:

If any man in this town thinks we need another paper, let him speak out and we'll advertise his want at half rates. There we have left the News in the shade—we advertised our aspirant to fill the "long-felt want" here, gratis.

John H. Jenkins, Sr., recently gave through the Blast Advertiser, some interesting sketches of the early history of that and adjacent counties, Indian fights and adventures, etc. In one of them we find the following amusing incident involving the family of a former citizen of this place: An amusing little incident occurred in this connection, though not very amusing to those most intimately involved. A man by the name of Walker Wilson lived in an upper settlement, on what is called Maylaw creek, and owned a number of very fine cows in which his wife took special pride. Regularly, at nightfall, one could see Mrs. Wilson, with her little negro girl, Sook, going with buckets to milk. One evening the cows were unusually late coming home, and they were milking some time after dark. "Why, here's Brownie!" she called out. "Brownie—Sook was sent to find and bring her up. Coming back without success, Mrs. Wilson concluded to look around for Brownie a little herself. Seeing a dark object moving along near her, and supposing it to be the missing cow, she called out: "Why, here's Brownie! Sook, I knew you never half looked!" Then stepping round she said, "Ho, Brownie!" when what was her surprise and terror, to see the supposed cow straighten up into an Indian, with a long gun! Almost crazed, the old lady ran for the house, screaming "Indians, Wilson! Jones!" At the dairy another jumped out as she was passing by. These evidently only wanted to steal, for they ran off without harming anyone.

A World-Wide Traveller and his Work. Mr. H. D. Stiles called on us yesterday. He is a gentleman of a very remarkable history. Some twenty-five years ago he was a resident of Austin. Since that time he has traveled round the world via San Francisco, the Sandwich Islands, New Zealand and Australia, where he spent three years, Japan, China, Ceylon, Africa, across the Red Sea into Egypt, Malta, Rome, Naples and by way of France and England home. He now resides at Vineland, New Jersey. Mr. Stiles has resumed his business of book agent which he successfully prosecuted during his travels. He is taking subscriptions for two books of remarkable interest. One is entitled Underground, or Life Below, by Thos. W. Knox, a famous author and traveler. It treats of the remarkable mines, caverns, tunnels, depths of the sea, volcanoes, buried cities, &c., &c., of his world, and is instructive as well as interesting. The other is entitled, "Detective of Europe and America," by an author thoroughly conversant with his subject. It details many celebrated cases and is a work of thrilling interest. Each of these books consists of one large handsomely bound volume, profusely illustrated. Mr. Stiles will call on our citizens for their subscriptions, and will no doubt be able to elicit their favorable consideration.

Genuine—No Mistake. Two carloads of Louisiana Molasses at lower rates than heretofore offered in this market. See Mr. Harris' freight agent, if you doubt his being what it purports to be—genuine Louisiana Molasses. G. C. WEEMS.

CARD. Acme and chronic Diseases a specialty, embracing all Pulmonary troubles by Dr. Lucius V. Weather, San Antonio, Texas. Office and rooms over Goodrich Bank, corner Houston and Soledad Sts.

"THE CURRENT" CHICAGO. The greatest literary and library work of our time. Only $4.00. The Current and Free Press one year only $4.00.

PERSONAL.

Miss Mattie Houtor is attending school at San Antonio.

Mr. Ross, is now with Maj. Hutchison. See card.

Mrs. Roussavall, now of Waco, was visiting here a few days since.

W. R. McMullin goes to Dripping Springs to engage in the saddlebury business.

Some drummer in a buggy drove partially off the bridge by Mr. Haymes' on Monday night and came near upsetting.

Cook, Denman & Franklin is the name and style of the law firm at San Antonio to which San Marcos contributed a member.

Ormond Paget, representing the St. Louis Type Foundry, made us a pleasant call yesterday.

H. T. Burke, of Houston, a brother-in-law of the late E. H. Cushing, representing the paper house of E. C. Palmer, New Orleans, called on us last week.

Jno. T. Townsend has favored us with some further statements regarding Mexican affairs, but his article is unavoidably postponed to our next issue. Mr. T. will now remain in this county.

Col. Jones, a wealthy gentleman from New York City, the father of our townsmen, W. Goodrich Jones, is here on a visit. Mr. Jones, sen., we learn, was a resident of Galveston in the pioneer days of Texas.

Iglehart has turned over his stock of goods to P. J. Willis & Bro., Galveston, who have put the concern in charge of Mr. Gillespie, who is adding to the stock and will continue the business.

We would be pleased if our readers would hand us any little personal items concerning their friends and visitors. We do not know of anyone who visits our town and have to depend upon such information as comes in our way.

Jan. G. Burleson says his uncle Aaron, an account of whose death we clip from the Statesman, dropped dead while looking up his horse as usual in the morning. The article copied is probably incorrect as to the particulars of his death.

Mr. Hills has purchased the stock of Mr. Wilcox and has removed his fruit and confectionary store to the stand of the latter, next door to the post office. His daughter, the fair Miss Sallie, will reside at the telephone.

"Don't put it in the paper." This is a remark that is often made to newspaper men by people who know things of interest to the public, but have an idea that the information is either unimportant, or that they may be accused of peddling out news. Whatever is of interest to a number of people is news worth publishing.

J. L. Jennings, Paint Rock, Onocho county, writes us under date 10th inst., as follows: "Enclosed find $3.00 for the Free Press from Nov. 1884 to 1885. I am very well pleased with the paper. He adds: 'Stock is looking very well yet. Most all the cattle of this country have drifted west to Devil's River for better protection and grass. Horse stock are in good condition and don't seem to want to drift like cattle.'

Will Burleson has shown us a circular addressed to members of the Burleson family in all parts of the United States, proposing the holding of a reunion of the family at the Colosseum Baptist church, in New Orleans, on the 19th of February. We learn from the circular that the first of the name who came to America was Aaron Burleson, a native of Wales. He came to North Carolina in 1782. The family are now scattered all over the South, and we noticed one member who signed the circular hailed from Minnesota, and so in Texas parlance is a "Yankee." The Elliots, Hardemans and others related to the Burlesons are included in the invitation.

COOPER WAGONS. We have a car of these celebrated wagons. G. W. DONALSON & Co.

On the subject of legal advertising, sheriff's constables, guardians, and in fact all sales of real estate by decree of court, the Corsicana Courier says: "The proper advertising of all such sales in some regular newspaper for not less than six weeks, would be an act of justice to every poor man, minor or orphan who might come within the jurisdiction of the law, for it would effectually expose the scheme of sharpers who are looking for 'soft snaps' and give the sale such publicity as to insure returns approximating the value of the property sold. Such a law is one of the most important measures which can come before our legislature for consideration, and we trust the measure will receive prompt and intelligent attention."

Oyster Creek, Jan. 18, 1885. EDWIN FREE PRESS.—It is hard for a correspondent to write unless he has something of interest, at least it is so with the post-scriber here, for it produces such a strain upon his imagination. Fortune has not blessed him with wealth and a superfluity of intellect, so as to burst upon the world, as it were, and startle the stupid inhabitants of this our beloved land to an active and enterprising life. So not having been born heir to those accidental and natural inheritances we are content to walk. We have always thought the plodding man the surest of success. This is beautifully illustrated in the story of the hare and the tortoise, with which every school boy, we presume, is acquainted.

Since it is not our lot to wield an elegant pen, but to guide the plow and "tickle" the soil with the hoe, we pride ourselves in so doing, and speak encouragingly to the hardy sons of toil, in speaking praise of our success, in comparing our own rapidly developing country with those of other sections.

Within the last decade we have grown from a few sparsely settled farms to an almost thickly settled community. We hear of hard times, but we say, "courage, friend, liars is hope in the future." Why, just think of it, notwithstanding the seemingly short crops within the last two years, compared to '82, we have a plenty to eat, and a good deal of respectability, for where is the man more respected by the merchant than the farmer? Be courageous young man, we are going to have a good time. We see signs of progress in our little Rome, San Marcos. We want to see her swell to a population of ten thousand; then we can carry our surplus of eggs, butter, chickens, etc, and get a good price, and have a plenty of money to buy the baby a coat, and then the baby will smile and make our hearts leap for joy, and our good wives will smile and look sweet, and call us blessed of men. Let us say we don't wish to tamper on anybody's feelings while speaking of the baby. There is nothing that so cultivates a household, and sets a man a thinking, and throws him into so much activity as the smile of the baby. We regard the babies as the greatest institution of the land, for therein lies the hope for the future president, historian and poet.

Full Particulars of the Death of Hon. Schuyler Colfax.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Press specials from Memphis, Miss., says: Ex-Vice-President Schuyler Colfax dropped dead in the gentlemen's waiting-room of the Omaha railway depot at this place at 10:35 o'clock this morning. He had arrived from Wells, a town on the Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, and had walked to the Omaha depot, a distance of three-quarters of a mile. As he arrived at the platform of the latter depot he asked a baggage-man the way to the gentlemen's waiting-room. These were the last words he uttered. He walked into the waiting-room and seemed very much out of breath, but did not stop to rest. After stepping inside he walked up to a map on the wall, and after perusing it for a while, walked across the room to a window and looked out for a short time. He then sat down with his overcoat on his lap, and crossed his legs. He was found by the baggage-man at 11:00 o'clock. A gentleman sitting opposite noticed that Mr. Colfax looked very pale, but took no special notice until he saw the leg crossed over the other drop, and then there was a pitching forward of the body to the floor. It was apparent by the appearance of Mr. Colfax's features that he had been stricken by death. Several persons rushed up as the gentleman called for help, but to all interrogations Mr. Colfax remained speechless, only groaning with such respiration. The windows were thrown up and the doors opened, and the cold winter air rushed in, but the breath of the prostrate man grew fainter and fainter, and before it was realized, had stopped altogether. The surrounding gentlemen raised the body and laid it on a settee, but it was evident life had departed. Dr. Ward and Jacoby were called, but were too late to render any assistance. No one present knew Mr. Colfax, and he was only identified by letters and papers found in his possession. The news spread rapidly, and the entire town was aroused. It was heard that Ex-Vice-President Colfax was lying dead in the Omaha depot was enough to attract crowds of men, women and children, who came in throngs and gazed on his prostrate remains. No one knew where he came from or where he was going, and the dead statesman lay in that cold room for some time the veriest stranger in the land. It was supposed he was out on a lecturing tour, and intending to take the 11 o'clock train for the West. The body was taken in charge by the Odd Fellows, with which organization Mr. Colfax was connected, and taken to the home of D. Harrington, where it was properly cared for. Word was immediately sent to South Bend, Ind., and advice was called upon that some one would be up at once to take the body in charge. President Arthur was also notified. It was supposed that the extreme cold, the subsequent rain and the over-exertion caused a stoppage of the flow of blood to the heart.

A coroner's jury was called together this afternoon, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts, that death resulted from heart disease.

This evening the remains were laid in state at the residence of Dr. Harrington, and large parties of citizens called to view the face of the distinguished dead. At 10 o'clock a procession was formed to escort the remains to the North-west depot, made up of the civil authorities in the city, the militia, the common council, and an escort of mounted citizens. The casket containing the body was placed on a special car, in charge of L. B. Hunt and S. Patterson, and started for South Bend.

The remains were received at Chicago with public honors, and taken to the home of D. Harrington, where they were in charge of L. B. Hunt and S. Patterson, and started for South Bend.

There are many people of this county who never subscribe for newspapers, thinking, perhaps, that it is spending money foolishly, but who never made a more desirable error during their lives. For show us a boy or girl who has been allowed the reading of newspapers, especially at their homes, and we will show you more intelligence in that boy or girl, at twelve years of age, than others have at eighteen. A newspaper reader has a better knowledge of human nature than one who does not read the current history of the day. Men's faults and virtues are made known, and, as "the proper study of mankind is man," a newspaper is an indispensable article for both young and old.

Plain Questions. Medical ideas are tending the public law with the best of projects, ignorance or bunglery, have you the remotest idea that your article was copied by the use of a rubber stamp? Be sure what the case, E. E. B. is the peer of all other remedies. Do you presume that your troubles are cured by the use of a rubber stamp? E. E. B. is the only reliable remedy. Are your chronic pains and aches and pains the result of a rubber stamp and not a medical preparation? Will you tell me, but E. E. B. is the only reliable remedy. Are your chronic pains and aches and pains the result of a rubber stamp and not a medical
