TO NEWSPAPERS. An old and experienced journalist, extensively and favorably known throughout the state, desires an editorial position upon some leading paper, or to establish a paper if he could find a good locality, where a good interior journal is desired. He can furnish the highest recommendations. Solicits correspondence, Address: J. G., care of Marshall Herald, Marshall, Texas.

MARCH 4, 1885. AFTER many days.

THE Republican party is "a putrid reminiscence."

DEMOCRACY reigns and the government at Washington still lives.

TRUTH crushed to earth has risen again. The present lease is for ninety-nine years.

THE editor of the Galveston News ought to hurry back from the New Orleans exposition.

EVERY compassionate heart will go out in forgiveness of Blaine, for his Augusta screw, to-day. Let him lie in peace.

BLAINE is looking with wistful eye at Washington to-day and wondering how such a thing can be and not overcome us like summer clouds.

THE Chicago Herald is responsible for the statement that ladies who button their dresses at the neck are going to be in style under the new administration.

THE Waco Examiner affects to doubt the progress of the work on the extension of the Fort Worth & Denver. Come up next month, neighbor, and take the cars for Wilbarger county.

BLAINE feels worse than Arthur does to-day. The latter can console himself with the thought that it is better to have been there, Eli, and then turned out than never to have been there at all.

NEWDEALERS should be prepared for a great increase in the demand for papers to-morrow morning on account of the ceremonies attending the inauguration of President Cleveland. A full description will appear in to-morrow's GAZETTE.

AFTER all that can be said against the practice of carrying six-shooters, had there been a few well-armed men on the train the murderous of Marshall Hal Gosling would doubtless have been pursued and killed or captured within half a mile of the train-Galveston News.

And if no one at all on the train had had a pistol poor Hal Gosling would not have been killed.

CORRESPONDENTS who have written THE GAZETTE on other than matters of current interest must bide a time with patience. There is more interest just now in the transfer of the government from Republican to Democratic hands, and in what Cleveland will do with it, than all other matters combined.

It would seem that the tribulations are not all with our own esteemed contemporaries. The editor of a Russian daily thus explained the frequent hiatuses in its appearance: "The paper is often in want of information, often in want of writers, and in want of money; and sometimes, when it has all these, it is in want of readers."

A CHANCE for a good Democrat to get office seems imminent in the pension bureau. It seems that under Commissioner Dudley's administration the expenses have been increased 196 per cent, while the amount of work done has only increased about 8 per cent over the previous administration! The Confederate orphans need no aid, being all of age, and the boys in blue might be pensioned at a less expense under a new administration. Turn the racial

A FRENCH scientist has been studying the effects of altitude upon vegetation, and concludes that for each augmentation of about one hundred yards there will be, as a general average, a retardation of four days; that is, other circumstances being equal, a crop planted at the sea-level will appear above ground four days before a similar crop planted three hundred feet above it.

The press dispatch from Chicago Sunday, gives the Inter-Ocean as authority for the rumor that Gen. Fitz Hugh Lee would probably be the commander of a Fenian Irish brigade to be raised for service against the English in Egypt. Gen. Fitz Lee, probably, has about as much idea of commanding a squadron of line-of-battle-ships—"in the nations airy navies, grappling in the central blue!" The Inter-Ocean is hardly good authority on such a question. The country can well spare a few brigades of Fenians, for any service, but not our Fitz.

It is certain that leases can be regulated so as not to interfere with the progress of settlement and wise legislation will so regulate the matter as to allow strikes and insure the best results for the whole state. Western members can accomplish a great deal by yielding only a little of their extreme position on the land question.—Clebourn Telegram.

"Western members" expect to yield much of their wishes, because they are sensible men and know they cannot accomplish their ends and have no desire to obstruct legislation. But so far "the compromise" seems to be all turkey for the lease law men and bullionaires, and all buzzard for the West, for the actual settler and for the Western Man with the Hoe.

How Lands Are Grabbed.

It is not alone in Texas that cattle corporations are seeking to secure permanent ranges and thus tie up vast bodies of land from settlement. By connivance of the Interior department leases have been secured in the Indian territory, and it is gravely intimated that there is "something rotten in Denmark" about the whole business. These big cattle corporations have large interests at stake, and it would not be surprising if they should place some of their immense profits where they would do the most good in effecting a perpetuation of the cattle-raising business on a big scale. On this subject, the Chicago Herald says: "The Interior department seems to be interested in some mysterious manner in nearly all these leases of Indian lands to cattle syndicates. Every time an Indian agent is brought up with a round turn for undue interference in behalf of the land grabbers he pleads that he is only acting on orders received from Washington."

Special agents of the Interior department appear to be at work in many places as the agents of cattle corporations driving sharp bargains with the savages, and, in fact, making an official transaction out of something which concerns only private interests. It is difficult to reconcile this apparent partnership between the Interior department and the land grabbers with any theory of public duty and common honesty.

The motive of the cattle men in securing these leases is plain. The Indian reservations are a hundred times larger than they need be. In the ordinary course of events they would be reduced in size and the surplus lands disposed of to settlers. If the corporations can secure long leases on them at a few cents an acre per year they will practically become the owners of them and the necessities of settlers will have no weight as against the binding force of the contracts."

The Land of the Free.

The head of the government in the United States is changed to-day with but the natural partisan ripple on the surface of our affairs. In no other country on the globe could so mighty a political revolution occur with so little impress on the daily life and thought and action of the people. Not in England, the boasted home of liberty and political wisdom, could the present head of its government give way to a successor with such perfect acquiescence from all classes and kinds of people and such absolute freedom from all thought or desire for change in the form of government, suggested by change in its administrative head. Not as Democrats, not as Republicans not as North, or South, or East, or West, let us be grateful to-day; but as Americans, glorifying liberty and determined to perpetuate the constitution and the Union which guarantee political equality, personal liberty and "a government of the people, by the people, for the people."

Americans, whether under Arthur or Cleveland, have much to be grateful for—more to be grateful for than the people of any land. The peaceful change just effected teaches the true value of republican institutions and should inculcate profounder respect for that vital precept of democracy which says "the majority should rule." This is the groundwork of the blessings we enjoy to-day, for it makes possible the peaceful acquiescence in such mighty contests as that which has seated Grover Cleveland in the presidency. Intrenched for a quarter of a century in power more absolute than that ever enjoyed by any party in the Union, swayed by influences calculated to inspire it even with forcible resistance to all efforts for its expulsion, corrupted by the very elements of its strength, the Republican party has yielded without sensible murmur or protest to the will of the majority, and thus, in its death throes, given out to all future parties a nobler teaching than any which marked its life and away. As the dying notes of the swan are said to be its sweetest, so is the example set by the Republican party on its death-bed the one for all Americans to heed; and those who fought it in life can most cheerfully congratulate it on the patriotism of its death, and pray that no temporary resurrection may enable it to mar the beautiful and loyal manner of its submission to the inevitable—to the rule of the majority—to the Democracy.

Fort Worth and The Gazette.

The Fort Worth GAZETTE, which ought to understand the subject, describes Fort Worth as the paradise of Texas—read: "In the enumeration of the prints of Fort Worth's superiority to all cities in Texas, yesterday, we neglected to refer to the fact that we have the best system of public schools. The truth is Fort Worth is so much blessed over Texas towns, that our people, themselves, can't recall in an hour all they have cause to boast of." The reader is under no legal compulsion to believe any more of this than is entirely convenient and agreeable; yet he can properly concede that the writer believes it, or at least tries to believe it, as a loyal citizen should; and give him full credit for journalistic devotion, which may be either conscientious and heart-felt devotion, or a professional devotion. The Fort would be a comparatively unknown locality, were it not for the loyalty of THE GAZETTE.—[Clarksville Standard.]

It is "conscientious devotion," and but for the Fort there would be no GAZETTE. THE GAZETTE works for Fort Worth because the paper is the child of the town. No town of its size in the United States gives such generous support to a newspaper as Fort Worth gives to THE GAZETTE, and no paper in the United States is more popular at home than is THE GAZETTE in Fort Worth. Fort Worth makes THE GAZETTE, and THE GAZETTE, in its turn, labors to build up Fort Worth. THE GAZETTE claims for Fort Worth nothing that the city does not deserve. No city in the state has a better water supply, this place having nearly two hundred artesian wells in addition to its water-works supplied from the clear Fork. No city in the state has better railroad facilities for reaching the white population and those sections which are receiving seventy-five per cent. of the immigration coming into Texas. No city in the state has more miles of street railways and telephone wires. No city in the state is a healthier. No city in the state has a more efficient public school system. No city in the state erected more business houses or finer ones during the recent financial depression. No city in the state has more churches. No city in the state has a more enterprising population or people who act more in harmony. No city in the state has more territory to its wholesale trade. No city in the state has more pluck and energy. No city in the state has more hotels or needs more as badly. No city in the state has such promise of future greatness. From no other city in the state is there any railroad building. At no other cities in the state do so many passengers get off and on the trains in twenty-four hours.

Fort Worth unknown! Esteemed contemporary, the tribulation through which THE GAZETTE passed last summer would have killed it had it been printed in any other town in the state. THE GAZETTE'S vitality comes from the soil in which it grows.

Good Government and Good Times.

This day marks an epoch in the history of the country. It brings into power again the great party of the people, after an exclusion of twenty-four years from government. It signifies the transfer of government authority from the Republican to the Democratic party and the advent of an era of purer, better and simpler manners. It is a return to popular government, in which the spirit of the whole people is impressed upon the law; in which the popular will directs the course of the administration, in that respect contrasting distinctly with the policies and practices of the party that retires from authority, which administered the government in favor of capital and corporations, and was and is entirely governed by aristocratic influences. It is a revolution in favor of reform. From this day dates a change that must be for the good of the country, and the promotion of the general welfare. Bringing such promise, it comes laden with joy to every patriot, and will be hailed all over the land with feelings of the most profound satisfaction by every lover of his country's good.

To-day witnesses the final achievement of the efforts of a quarter of a century. At every presidential election since 1850 the result has been disastrous to the Democratic party. Six times have the men who fought under that banner been led forth to battle by chosen leaders, and as often have they been repulsed in their efforts to dislodge the enemy from the intrenchments of official position. The victims of defeat are illustrious, and not few.

But the persistency and zeal of the party have never been extinguished; and to-day, in the restoration to power and government, their efforts are fittingly rewarded.

The present success of the Democratic party is an inspiring example of the endurance of principle. Briefly scan the short history of our country, and note the rise and fall of parties, their changing attitudes, their vacillating conduct, their varying professions, their shifting policies, and see through it all one party whose fidelity of principle has perpetuated its life while others have died and gone from memory. It is to-day the same party of the people as when it followed the leadership of Jefferson, often to defeat, but at last to victory and glory. It has witnessed the death of the Federalist party and its Whig successors, but itself has stood unshaken and with vigor undiminished by age. As it triumphed over them it has triumphed over their successor and representative, the present Republican party. As it witnessed their death, it will witness the death of the Republican party; but itself is immortal, because built upon undying principles.

The Democratic party has given the country eight presidents, and forty-eight years of our national existence have been under their administrations. All of the great achievements of our history were under Democratic administration of the government. The second war with Great Britain was successfully conducted by a Democratic president, and the greatest and decisive victory won by a general who afterward became one of the most illustrious presidents of that party. The acquisition of Louisiana and Florida, with their immense territory and boundless resources, were feats of Democratic statesmanship, as was the wresting of Texas from Mexico, and the purchase of California. The wisdom which conceived these measures, and the energy which carried them out, have not been lost for lack of their exercise. They will be brought into being again, and serve to start the country anew upon a career of glory. The time is an auspicious one. The wide-spread business and industrial depression of the last eight months is giving way to a revival of trade and growing activity in workshops and storehouses. Everything promises an improvement, and everybody is full of hope. The political change which takes place to-day, accompanying a renewal of business prosperity, strengthens the hope of the future. It is well that honest government and good times should come together. It is well that we should be able to date our rescue from political dangers and our relief from financial evils from the same moment. Let us be duly thankful for the great blessings which this day brings to the people, and endeavor to deserve their continuance.
