How Holland's Counsel Fought to Keep Hill from Testifying in whiskers cliuging to the wall, his thin brown bands clutching a bag to steady himself. Theodore Davis yesterday put his eye to the peephole through which he saw Holland, the Texan dead shot, cover his brother Tom with a pistol carrying a half inch bullet. The gambler was showing how he saw the scene that preceded the murder. At his side was Lawyer Steinbardt and Detective Handy, who each took a term of the walls as well close our courts."

Davis auswered the question and confessed that Butler had been in prison. Then the witness was led over the story of the shooting in detail. He had already told two different versions of what Holland said when he pulled out his pistol, and he now gave a new one: "My brother pleaded for his life, saying: For God's sake, you would not kill a man; then he lifted up his coat skirts and turned around, saying, 'Don't get excited, you can see I am unarmed.'"

THE PANEL GAME ILLE STRATED. Steinbardt and Detective Handy, who each took a turn at the panel. In the blood-stained office of the dead sport stood Police Captain Eakin, personating the Texan, while Mr. Applegate, of the district attorney's office, acted the part of Tom Davis and collightened, had an imaginary bullet fired through his heart. Theodore Davis and Detectives asked Lawyer Price. heart. Theodore Davis and Detectives Handy alternately went through the motions of aiming pistols and receiving bullets in their breasts, while Mr. Applegate and the captain peeped through the little slot cut in the edge of the panel door. The captain ordered that the desk in the room, together with that portion of the wooden wall containing the panel, be taken to the station house to be used at the trial of Holland. Then the little mel-odrama was over and the actors in it went away.

Red and orange sparkles danced from the diamond horseshoe on the bosom of Holland as he was led between the gloomy rows of granite pillars into the court of special sessions. The Texan wore a nobby new suit of brown checked clothes, and his hair was barbered with great elegance. His friend Hill, who was bandcuffed to him, wore a fine suit of blue, and twirfed his prairie moustached dreamily. He did not seem to care whether he was in prison or not. The young Texas gentlement who. Texas gentlemen who hung young around the door said that the two men were daisies. A CHARGE AGAINST DAVIS.

There were no diamonds on the breast of Theodore Davis. The brother of the dead man wore mourning black from head to foot. His fingers trembled and he seemed to be uneasy when Justice Gor-man turned his mild bine eyes and dimpled face toward him. Just then it was learned that Capt. Eakin had preferred a complaint charging Davis with an attempt to commit grand farceny in swindling the Texau through the sawdust game; Lawyer Howe swelled into view just in time. An entirely new set of diamond studs, pins and buttons twinkled on a shirt front that was a wonder of brown patterns. At his back was Lawyer Hummel, like a black sprite with a bald head, little blue legs and patent leather feet. A clover leaf, with black, white and pink pearls, held a diamond dew-drop between the points of his collar, and a gold death's-head, with diamond eyes, grinned on his watch-

"It's an outrage to think of arresting Theodore Davis," said Mr. Howe. "It would be crippling the prosecution and against the interests of justice. He is the brother of the man who was butchered in cold blood, and is the chief witness of the people."

Just then the court received this note from Auditary District Attention Parts.

from Assistant District Attorney Purdy and dismissed the complaint:

DEAR SIR-In regard to issuing a war rant against Theodore Davis, I learn that a complaint is drawn against him for attempt at grand larveny, based on his de-charations as a witness for the people. I do not think it would be well to entertain such a complaint at present. If in onsultation with Mr. Martine he should Pup direct otherwise I will notify you at once.

"I have no sympathy," cried Mr. Perdy, "with people who think that because Tom Dayls was pursuing a dishonest avocation his life could be taken in cold blood. The life of this man, swindler though he was, is as dear and as precious to this state as the life of its best citizen. The law and the courts are ready to avenge the crime, and nothing shall intervene to stay the punishment. If because a man is a swindler he can be muritered, we might as well close our courts."

Davis answered the question and con-

Mr. Grady cleared his throat and started "The only way in which Mr. Hill will accept his discharge is when the people end their case. It is the only way his counsel will allow him to be discharged. As it is, if he takes the stand and testifles, e can be arrested as soon as he leaves it.

This move was only made to create a sen-"It is absurd to say that Mr. Hill can insist upon being a prisoner," said Mr. Purdy. "He is now free and must take the stand. If he can clear his friend let him do it. If he can not, we are entitled to his evidence before a story can be made up between them."

"I certainly will commit him," said the court, "and I'll fix his ball at $2000," suggested Mr. Howe.

"Oh, no, Tom Grady. You won't get your hands on that!" cried Mr. Howe. And, singularly enough, Mr. Humms solemnly closed one eye, opened it very Torpid Liver, Billous Attack, Jaundice and Sallowness.

These disorders are the result of a mor-bid action of the liver, an acrid or over production of bile, or of some obstruction in the gall ducts, preventing the natural flow of bile into the intestines, the bile being re-absorbed into the circulation, producing impurities of the blood and showing itself in the yellow color of the skin and eyes. ## THE GALE ON THE LAKES.

Wrecks of Vessels and Loss of Life, CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 10 .- The easterly gale which swept the lake yesterday was more severe and greater in area than any other gale of the season. Returns thus far show the damage to the shipping exposed quite general. The lake on the west shore between Chicago and Milwaukee Is filled with floating lumber, shingles and lath, and in various places small pieces of wreck have been seen. A number of ves-sels are long over-due here and their coming is anxiously awaited.

An unknown vessel was wrecked at Two Rivers, Wis., yesterday, about five miles north of the harbor piers. Noth-ing was found to indicate the name of the vessel. No bodies have been dis-covered on the shore, and unless the crew abandoned the vessel, or the vessels, wrecked, and sought safety in some other vessel, they must have perished. Reports are still coming from all along the lakes of vessels driven ashore and wrecked. Several towing steamers were obliged to cut their tow lines to save themselves, and numbers of vessels were abandoned and have not yet been heard from. It is feared the loss of life and property is very great.

Very Remarkable Recovery.
