

Modern Fables,

The Modern Fable of the Sickly Dream and How It Was Doctored Up.

By George Ade. Copyright, 1902, by R. H. Russell.

One Day a pure white Soul that made Sonnets by Hand was sitting in his Apartment...

Presently he put his left hand to his brow and began to write with a pearl-handled Pen on Red Paper...

He began to write again, reviving himself at the end of each Word by means of Smelling Salts...

EMBROIDERING A CANTO. I've heard of the Fays and Elins, replied the Artist...

They're out on the Orpheum Circuit, said the Artist...

Well, you're on a couple of Mackerels, eh? Well, you're on a couple of Mackerels, eh? Well, you're on a couple of Mackerels, eh?

Well, you're on a couple of Mackerels, eh? Well, you're on a couple of Mackerels, eh? Well, you're on a couple of Mackerels, eh?

to what am I indebted for the Honor in Visit? asked the Artist...

THE ARTIST. He needn't up white we was waitin' for a Train...

A RIGHT HAND PASS. I've thought out a Make-Up that's sure to get a Holler...

"Hold on!" said the Artist. "That's a Cinch. Have a Stage-Hand come on with the Flowers..."

PARRY A COMPLIMENT. I've thought out a Make-Up that's sure to get a Holler...
