Artist Feared Waning Powers. On one occasion the late G. F. Watts, feeling that he was getting old and fearing that his powers might be declining, asked the selection and judging committees of the Royal Academy to "judge his work severely, as he did not wish to disgrace the academy nor himself. He had seen so much deplorable work of eye and hand that he did not wish to be added to the number."

Germans on Prize Ship. Most of the crew of the British steamship Cheltenham, which has been adjudged a lawful prize at the Vladivostok prize court, were Germans. When the Russians seized the vessel the Germans manifested their delight by cheers.

Only New Mistakes Condoned. The following is a rule in an Athenian wholesale house: "Employees are welcome to one mistake, but we seek it to 'em for making the same mistake twice."—Athenian Globe.

Watermelon Syrup. In York county, Virginia, they are making watermelon syrup, which is said to be rich and soft in taste, and as good as it sounds. The seeds are the earliest watermelons away. She can by no means eat all the later and best, inevitably, there is great waste of watermelons. Watermelon syrup, watermelon sugar, there is a new industry in the bud. If the flavor of watermelon syrup is as happy as it is pointed maple syrup will have to look to its laurels. Besides, it is getting harder every year, in the cities at least, to get genuine maple syrup. With the Prozessor, Everybody's Magazine.

Time to Quit. At the moving ceremony of the famous Bartholdi statue the clergyman who offered the opening prayer was inclined to yawn and his secretary, Gen. Sherman was sitting beside him and at length, quietly putting one arm over the other, said to the reverend gentleman: "You are yawning, and I think you had better quit."—August Lippincott.

The Woman with a Baby.

"Mid the herd of human parkers crouched on the trolley car. All is selfishness and spite, crawling and crawling on the trolley car. Men collapse in seats and stay there, letting shrieking ladies stand with a look of indignation and a strap in either hand. Yet there's one thing that you've noticed never fails to make a stir—When a woman with a baby comes they all make room for her."

There is something sweet, Madonna-like, in pictures such as that. And it makes the latest fashion feel like taking off his hat. For it bears him back to boyhood, when being motherly was a duty. "I had to call a trust."

BETTY'S SURRENDER. Chivers looked disgustedly at the canvas over which Betty had already smeared more than a dollar's worth of paint.

"I would suggest," he said quietly, "that if you want to put any more paint on that cow, you had best use clay modeling tools." "There you go again," she stormed. "How do you expect me ever to become a great artist if you nag that way?"

"I don't expect you to become great," he reminded her gently. "I don't want you to become great. I want you some day to realize that it is better to be a good wife than a poor bohemian artist."

WEAKENS SENSE OF SMELL. Civilization as It Progresses Makes the Nose Less Sensitive. Someone recently remarked that we were losing the sense of smell. In the Boer war it was noticed that we had not the keen eyesight of the hunter and the savage. The primitive physical qualities must needs go with civilization, but as regards the sense of smell, smoking, no doubt, is partly answerable for this. The frequent odor of tobacco kills the other scents and the sense of smell needs cultivation.

Not in Demand. One of the city's best-known piano teachers met the other day a younger colleague and inquired how he was progressing.

Almost Desirable. A new skin disease has been discovered in Vienna, the exanthem variabile. A doctor says: "The symptoms are originally a bright scarlet, becoming pink, connected with each other until they resemble a net. They spread in serpentine lines. The spots, somewhat elevated, are frequently drawn out into warts, pink, blue and granular. Very rarely there are hemorrhagic spots. The skin shows a silky sheen." What a beautiful way to be dead!

What is the Gift? green farm wagon hailed her as she descended from the car. "Goin' to Treston's, beart ye?" he shouted. "She nodded. "Jump aboard," giving her the lines to hold while he got her trunk. "One of them artists," he commented, as he threw her trunk and field case into the wagon box and climbed up beside her. "We had one down here last year."

OLD STRONGHOLD OF ROME. Sleepy British Town Once an Important Outpost of Empire.

Carlson of Roman times and of the days of King Arthur still exists. The famous city that was once the garrison of the second Augustan legion, the capital of South Wales and the seat of an archbishopric, is now a sleepy little town lying between the industrial centers of Pontypool and Newport, but is far enough away from both to have maintained the dignity and pathos of its isolation. Here are to be seen the ruins of a Roman amphitheater, a great oval bank of earth called Arthur's Round Table and an enormous mound once fortified by the Romans. The officers and men of the crack Roman regiment and their wives and families left many remains of their occupation—tomstones, fragments of household utensils, needles and fibulae, remains of villas and baths, lamps, glass and enamel ornaments, carvings, rings, seals and the like, to be gazed upon in the case of the local museum. The whole place, with its combination of hill and winding river, with low-lying houses nestling in abundant trees, forms a picture which many a painter has sought to portray on canvas.

First Beer in England. The vineyards wrap Ischia from seashore to mountain peak in a shimmering screen of green. Vines hang from tree to tree, making a leafy roof overhead and green, sun-pierced walls to the long alleys, where innumerable classic bunches grow. The grapes are still small and immature, but exquisite in form and color. In October, the season of vintage, this must be the most beautiful place on earth. Here one understands why the Roman soldiers in Britain, when they first saw the Kentish hop vines, thought they had found the nearest thing to the grape the average northern produced. In their efforts to make wine from hops they produced the first beer made in England—Maud Hove in Lippincott's.

Turned faint. He don't want to keep 'em. He sends 'em to us."

Betty asked to see the pictures before she unpacked. She was feeling particularly self-satisfied. But at sight of them she turned faint, and after a crying spell, which lasted several hours, she sent a telegram. "Please come. Am stepping at Treston's."

That was all, but Chivers, reading between the lines, knew that Betty had given up art after having seen her entire output on Treston's wall, and he blessed the fate that had unconsciously guided her there.
