Majority in Caldwell County Local Option Election Was Only Eleven. Pros Will Probably Contest.

REGULATION OR EXTINCTION

These Are the Two Horns of the Dilemma Confronting the Cotton Exchanges.

[Special to The Bryan Eagle.] New Orleans, La., March 13.—The Times-Democrat this morning says: "Either government regulation or extinction, according to F. L. Maxwell, who is one of the largest cotton producers in the South, is the arbitrary prospect before the future cotton trading exchanges. Mr. Maxwell opposes legislation of the Scott anti-future trading type, which he says would rob him and all other cotton producers and cotton handlers of the important benefits that accrue from the buying and selling of future hedges, but he emphatically believes in practical regulation of the exchanges by the federal government. Such regulation, he thinks, is due the farmer, the merchant and the consumer, and may be obtained in a manner that will help, not harm, the cotton industry in any way."
Mr. Maxwell raises somewhere between 2500 and 3000 bales a year on his model plantation at Mound, La. He is a modern farmer and always takes a leading part in movements having as their object the betterment of farming conditions.
"In my opinion," said he yesterday, "the United States bureau of corporations and labor should be empowered by congress to prescribe the form of contract under which the future trading of the exchanges is to be carried on. Recently that bureau spent two years in intelligent investigation of the cotton market, and in the report issued by Commissioner Herbert Knox Smith outlined the correct principle that should underlie all contract trading. This principle is nothing more nor less than that of common fairness. The suggestions made by Mr. Smith were in effect that the buyer and the seller of all exchange contracts be given equal rights and privileges, that none other than commercial cotton be deliverable, that the grade differences above and below middling at which cotton is delivered on contract be the natural or spot market differences, and that no artificial conditions that tell against either buyer or seller be permitted to exist. He also recommended the adoption by all exchanges of the government standard types.

"Were all the exchanges compelled to adopt the suggestions made by Commissioner Smith the cotton farmer would get all that is coming to him; the producer, merchant and consumer would continue to enjoy the benefits of the immensely valuable hedging system, the wings of the speculator would be clipped in a practical and lasting way, and the antagonism the farmer has been showing toward cotton exchanges in general would soon be a thing of the past."
"Were congress to pass a law giving supervisory powers to the bureau of corporations that bureau would quickly correct all the errors that remain without hurting any of the really good phases of the modern market. But should congress pass a bill similar to the Scott bill the cotton market would be thrown all out of joint, and the result would be control by a few rich and powerful merchants in the same way the tobacco and sugar markets are now controlled. In such event the producers could sell only to a few more or less non-competitive buyers who would then dominate the market, in place of the many competitive buyers, each bidding against the other, as is now the case."

Winfield Joel, a soldier who was stabbed, is improving but is not out of danger. Another soldier is held by the police charged with assaulting a patrolman.

"PRINCE AND PILOT"

are the Names Selected for our Match Team of horses. Names Suggested by Miss Bernardine McKnight, College, Texas

SECOND PRIZE

Mr. E. F. Parks, Bryan, Texas.
Dear Sir:—I name the six-year-old horse "Albus," meaning white, and the five-year-old horse "Dux," meaning leader. My reasons for naming this team as above, is that they are owned by a Leader in the Commercial life of Bryan, and that a clean deal will be given every customer at this great Furniture Store.
Yours truly,
Edna Wickes.

FIRST PRIZE

Mr. E. F. Parks, Undertaking Dept., Bryan, Texas.
Dear Sir:—I think Prince and Pilot would be appropriate names for your beautiful team of hearse horses. These names are short, easily pronounced and will soon be recognized by their owners. The horses are very closely related as well as very similar in appearance.

The names Prince and Pilot while not easily confused, yet bear a certain resemblance, due to a similarity of sound. Then too both these names are closely associated with the most sacred and beautiful philosophy of all time. It is in death these horses are to serve their chief function. And it is in death that we hope of a Pilot and a Prince for all. Tennyson voiced a truth when he wrote "I hope to meet my Pilot face to face when I have crossed the bar." The very color of these horses as well as the purpose they are to serve suggest the appropriateness of these names. For do we not find in sacred literature many references to the white robed Prince and the Pilot that is to be? The names Prince and Pilot are simple, appropriate and suggestive. What more could be wanted? There are no reasons against the adoption of these names; there are very good reasons why they should be adopted.
BENARDINE McKNIGHT.

SECOND PRIZE

Dear Mr. Parks: "Point" and "Pinto" are short names for the horses, agreeable in sound, yet describing them plainly without flourishes. The names are fitting because the horses are part of the E. F. Parks establishment, which goes strictly on its own merits and never misrepresents.
Sincerely,
Della Lawrence.
