John Westley Hardin's Say.

El Paso Times.

To the people of El Paso and to every one to whom it may concern: I have noticed several articles in the Times and Tribune reflecting on my character as a man. I wish to announce right now that my only ambition has been to be a man and you bet I draw my own ideas, and while I have not always come up to my standard, yet I have no kick to make against myself for default. My present and my future ambition is no higher than it has been in the past, and I wish to say right now whether in a gambling house or saloon, and El Paso seems to be crowded with these places, my only aim is to acquire myself manly and bravely. And as to the Acme jack-pot, I would not stand a hold-out, and get the pot without even threatening violence or drawing a gun. As to the Gem hold-up, after I was grossly injured by the dealer in a burrah number, hence I told him he could not win my money and burrah me too, and that as he undertook to burrah me he could deliver me the money I had paid and you bet he did it. When he counted out the $95 I said that is all I want, just my money and no more. He said all right Mr. Hardin, and when I left the room and gotten half-way down the stairs I returned hearing words of condemnation of my play. I said to every one in the house and connected with the play, I understand from the reflective remarks that some of you disapprove of my play. Now if this be so, be men and get in a line and show your manhood, to which no one made any reply, but others nodded that I was right and that they approved of my play. Now some one has asked for my 'ped'gree. Well, he is too gross to notice, but I wish to say right here—once for all, pluck, push and virtue wherever found. Yet I despise a coward and assassin of character, whether he be a reporter, journalist or gambler. And while I came to El Paso to prosecute Bud Frankler and did it on as high a plane as possible, I am now here to stay. I have bought an interest in the Wigwam saloon and you, vice whether in El Paso or elsewhere, that admire pluck, that desire fair play, are cordially invited to call at the Wigwam where you will have everything done to make it pleasant for you. All are invited to our blow-out on the evening of Fourth.

Now I have no apology to make to anyone for my acts over a jack-pot or a crap game, but solicit everybody's custom and guarantee fair play.

JOHN W. HARDIN,
At the Wigwam.
