IN STRANGE WATERS

On Classic Ground in Southern Chile. A SOUTHWESTERN ARCHIPELAGO. Valdivia's Town and Beautiful River—Villa Rica and its Volcano—Remarkable Islands.

feared in one of the innumerable battles between the Spaniards and the people fought on the banks of the Valdivia river and for some months afterwards remained in hiding, until one of the natives, being captured by the soldiers beyond the river, revealed his secret retreat. It is related that when Caupolican was captured, after a terrific struggle, his wife, who had exorted him to hide, threw her infant son at his feet, declaring that she would retain nothing to remind her of a coward. As among all Indian nations, the women of the early Chileans were noted for...

city wooden steps, was pounded upon a rickety wooden door, with a vision before our eyes of knights and troubadours, halberds and coats-of-mail—and were answered by the angry barking of a dog inside. Presently the door was opened by an elderly woman, who lives within the temporary enclosure in a little wooden hut, but leaned against the crumbling citadel, which appeared to be conjointly occupied by a numerous colony of pigs and chickens. A pile of boards obstructed the entrance to the tower, in front of which the angry dog tugged frantically at his chain; so that there was nothing to be done but scamper back to the landing with all possible speed.

one of spotless snow nearly 7,000 feet straight up from the blue Pacific. Its feet, its beauty is enhanced by numerous blue-glaciered glaciers, descending from its summit, as Darwin, who once saw it, said: "Like a hundred frozen Niagara." On the southern coast of Chile, as on that of Norway, the fjords are not only narrow but very deep, and the tides run with rapidity, the highest ebb being only a few feet above low water. Near its farther end is a huge, dome-shaped mountain, a mass of solid granite without a sign of verdure, down which cascades some tall pine trees, and a few small glaciers. Every afternoon, immediately on coming to anchor so as to make the most of the short twilight, the captain allowed his passengers to go ashore in the launch, the best landing places. Sailors were detailed to take care of the pic-nic, to build huge fires by piling brushwood around some tall pine trees, and to light the best landing places. THE NEW NORTHWEST. Franklin K. Lane—The Next Democratic Convention will Probably be Held at Tacoma. The portrait is of Franklin K. Lane, a representative man of Tacoma, the ruling city of Puget Sound. He is working like a beaver to procure from the Democratic National committee the promise that the next National convention of the party shall be held in the city which boasts of having the finest harbor on the Pacific coast and is the young giant of American towns.

IN THEIR NEW STORE. PROCURE IT BEFORE LEAVING HOME. M. B. Kilbourn left the west and settled in Orange Valley, New Jersey. He now finds that his favorite remedy for croup is not sold there and is anxious to get a supply. Here it is in his own words: "Can you let me know if Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is to be got in New York city or is sold by anyone in New Jersey? I want to get some; it being the best remedy I can find for croup. Since leaving the west I have not required any, but cold weather is coming and I may need it and am only sorry I did not bring some with me." For sale by Z. C. M. L. drug department.
