The Big Accident Near Hampton, Wyoming.

THE HERALD'S ACCOUNT VERIFIED

A Southern Pacific Train Shown in the Sierras—Personal and General Points.

The accident at Hampton, Wyoming, by which so many people were injured, and which was published in our Ogdon column yesterday morning, caused considerable commotion in this city.

Mr. Resseguie was inclined to be more sociable, however, and admitted that the published accounts were, in the main correct.

Under the caption of "A Duce Management," the Wall Street Daily News has the following concerning the order on the Reading requiring employees to keep their coats buttoned and to shave off their whiskers.

"If there was ever a more insolent and arrogant assertion of an authority that the stockholders never intended to give any official of a railroad company, we should be delighted to chronicle it.

The Vestibule as a Life Saver. The Railway Age says: The vestibule attachment is credited with having saved many lives in a recent collision on the Chesapeake & Ohio road, and it is believed that the heavy sleepers at the rear of the train would have telescoped the coaches except for this protecting appliance.

The Duplicate Order of Train Dispatching. The Railroad Gazette says: The duplicate order system of train dispatching is so manifestly superior to any other plan for general use that little argument is necessary to convince experienced operating officers who will intelligently and conscientiously examine the merits of the different methods.

Personal and General. The Indianapolis Journal says: "If the Philadelphia and Reading gets through without a strike over the recent order requiring certain classes of employees to hereafter appear with clean-shaven faces, it will be a surprise.

The importers of the San Francisco chamber of commerce have appealed to the interstate commerce commission against discrimination by the railroads.

The surveyors for the Manitoba Pacific extension report a practicable route by the Marias pass, the summit of which, 5,700 feet high, they say can be reached by a grade of less than one hundred feet to the mile.

A dispatch from London reports that Thomas Cook, senior member of the firm of excursion managers of Thomas Cook & Son, is dying at his home at Thraycroft at the age of eighty.
