ing a bayonet at the back of every unwilling planter,—and the scheme was a great success. It is safe to say that were a similar plan resorted to in this country in the utilization of the labor already available, the government might accomplish wonders in solving the labor shortage.

But no matter how necessary it may be, we are not yet ready to adopt such a drastic policy with respect to ourselves, and certainly we cannot consistently contemplate the use of alien labor in this fashion, even though the aliens be enemies. Moreover, Germany would retaliate with a vengeance. We might as well make up our minds to do the work ourselves.

WORKING PROHIBITION OVER-TIME.

SECRETARY of the Navy Daniels and William Jennings Bryan, prohibitionist plenipotentiary, insisting that greater efficiency is evidenced where shipyard workers have been denied alcoholic liquor, recognize only the pathological element in the general prohibition argument. Bainbridge Colby and Edward N. Hurley, of the ship-building board, and Postmaster General Burlison, maintain that greater efficiency will continue with a liberal flow of alcoholic drink; but in doing so, they do not necessarily deprecate Mr. Daniels' and Mr. Bryan's argument.

It should be borne in mind that efficiency results not from a single, common cause, but from various fundamental elements, not the least important of which is the worker's mental attitude. It does not necessarily follow that because Messrs. Colby, Hurley and Burlison hold for greater efficiency where alcoholic liquor is permitted that they maintain that alcohol makes for greater physical speed, endurance and stamina. It is their contention that if the ship-yard workers are discontented or dissatisfied for whatever cause or reason, they necessarily cannot or will not put the same spirit of willingness and co-operation into their labors. Consequently this psychological element is apt to reduce output, and a possible psychological reduction in efficiency is just as vital an argument in the production of ships as is the argument that prohibition promotes efficiency and output. It was not efficiency, or inefficiency, but growing dissatisfaction, that compelled Britain to increase her production of beer for the workers last year.

Both the wets and the drys are deducting from the shipyards-prohibition controversy a lot of substantiating propaganda that does not substantiate.—Detroit Saturday Night.

TELLING THE TRUTH.

IT is worth while noting that our war news is coming straight from the front these days, that the casualty lists are being announced daily, and that no less a personage than General March, the Chief of Staff, is meeting with the newspaper men at frequent intervals and spreading before them the real significance of the shifting scenes at the front. Meanwhile, we hear little from Baker and nothing from Creel. The Administration, it would seem, has finally sensed the advantage of taking the people into its confidence and of telling the truth. This marked change of attitude has already had a tremendous effect for good; the people are beginning to believe what they read again, and thus they are coming to manifest a spirit of confidence and good will towards the authorities that could nowhere be found a short time ago. In this we see one of the most cheering signs of the times.

There are enemy aliens and there are native aliens. The American who does not do his part toward winning the war, who neither fights nor works, nor lends for victory is as much an alien to America's purposes and America's cause as the rankest Prussian interned in this country. This is a war of peoples as well as of nations, and each individual has a place and a duty.—Pendleton Tribune.

To achieve victory we must have two armies: One that fights; one that saves. Every patriot will be a member of one of these armies.
