GREAT TIRE COMBINE.

Complete announcements have just been made regarding the formation of what is unquestionably the largest tire company in the world.

The new organization is composed of four of the most prominent makers of pneumatic and solid tires in the country—the Continental Caoutchouc Company of New York, the G. & J. Tire Company of Indianapolis, the Hartford Rubber Works Company of Hartford and Morgan & Wright of Detroit.

An idea of the broad basis on which the new company is formed may be gained from the statement that a conservative estimate places the company's automobile tire output alone, for the coming year, close to the three-quarters of a million mark—enough to supply a tire for every car in America today and still leave a generous supply for Europe and the rest of the world. The line will also include solid motor truck tires, vehicle tires, bicycle and motorcycle tires; in fact, tires for everything on wheels from a go-cart to a five-ton truck.

Precisely the same men have been placed at the helm of the new company who have guided the affairs of the separate organizations.

Three district branches have been established, one in New York for the eastern district, one in Chicago for the central district and a third in San Francisco for the western district. Through these three district offices all the business of the company will be transacted.

Distribution, always one of the most serious problems for any manufacturer to solve, has been well taken care of from the start. Five factories, branches or agencies in every large city and over 4,000 distributors located in every town and village of any prominence in the country will look after this end of the business.

During the past ten days a solicitor has secured numerous contracts with different banks, etc., through representation that he was about to publish a new Blue Book, the names in which would be sanctioned by a special committee, in the meantime, either directly or by inference, leading some advertisers to believe that the Blue Book was to be published by the same people who got out the last one.

Anyone is at perfect liberty to publish anything he cares to if he does it legitimately and without misrepresentation, but any contracts that may have been secured by using the names of the former publishers should be repudiated.

There are a number of legitimate publications and legitimate advertising agencies here without it being necessary for advertisers to be called upon to support every new scheme of anyone who happens to drop into the town, and advertisers should be more careful in accepting the word of any glib solicitor.

Local restaurant facilities have received a valuable addition in the opening of the Mission cafeteria on lower Main street. The new establishment was opened on the 27th of last month under the management of J. Lewis Strohauser and Fred Ritter, both of whom are experienced cafe men and thoroughly up-to-date in their methods.

The Mission is a cafeteria of the most modern type and the furnishings and interior decorations of the new place are extremely tasteful. A feature of the arrangements for the entertainment of guests is a collection of canary birds. The kitchen of the Mission is a model of sanitation and cleanliness.

By the way, Stickneys carry the largest assortment of high-class cigars for discriminating smoke consumers.
