ARE THE GERMANS DYING?

How much of truth there is in the statement of Prof. Max Von Cruceber that ten to fifteen million of the German people will die out, because Germany no longer can provide for them, is difficult to determine...

Professor Von Cruceber is full of resentment. He speaks of the theft of colonies, of merchant fleet and possessions abroad and of the unfair hunger blockade imposed during the war.

If the Germans, during the war suffered of hunger because of the blockade, they had only themselves to blame.

With the war over, we as a people must forget the bitterness of the struggle, and, although resenting accusations such as emanate from Professor Von Cruceber, plan to alleviate extreme distress and overcome unbearable conditions in Germany.

The French are suffering of the terrible afflictions placed on them by the invaders and a big part of France may never regain the physical strength of the days before the war.

ENGLAND'S PERPLEXITIES.

There is just enough smoke to indicate that the flames of Bolshevism have spread to England. At a meeting of the British labor leaders in London yesterday, resolutions were adopted in opposition to interfering with the Russian campaign on the Polish border.

"Desperate and dangerous as is our method," he continued, "we believe that the disease is so dangerous and the situation so desperate that it is only desperate and dangerous methods that can prevent calamity."

Robert Smillie of the miners' organization, said: "If France and General Wrangel cut off Russia's coal supply, will it be interfering too much with France if the British miners and railway men cut off France's supply?"

It is the possibility of this radical action on the part of labor unions in England that causes Lloyd George to seek a way out of the Russian tangle without military aggressiveness by Great Britain.

No premier of Great Britain ever has had a more difficult situation than that now confronting Lloyd George. His country is trying to turn away from all thought of the strain and stress and the blood of war, but there remains a great work undone in pacifying the world and snuffing out the flame of anarchy.

RECORD HAILSTORM.

Stating that the hailstorm in Lehi, last Monday evening was the greatest in Utah history, J. C. Alter declares many of the hailstones were five inches in circumference, and destroyed windows, shrubbery, fruit trees and garden stuff.

On examination, Mr. Alter found that the broken hailstones presented the usual, but very interesting, concentric layer structure, beginning at the center with a half-inch crystal marble or frozen raindrop; on this were alternate layers of opaque and crystal snow and ice, due to its having been repeatedly thrown aloft by violent vertical drafts into freezing atmosphere before hailstone was finally thrown far enough out at the top of the draft, or to one side of it, to allow the stone to fall entirely to the earth.

Mr. Alter says there are records of storms equally as heavy in the Salt Lake valley, although less destructive for the area covered. Probably the worst on record occurred near Salt Lake City on June 13, 1854, when hail injured several wheat fields most seriously in the region of the Big and Little Cottonwood creeks.
