

All About Ogden Pies YOU TELL 'EM PIEFACE You've Got The Crust

By AL WARDEN.

Pie—a word with a wonderful meaning. At least the city ed in his daily assignments informed me that such was the case and in his orders stated sweetly, that pies were fast forcing to the fore or front or to the lead, so to speak, in this wonderful country of ours. And so with an assignment of but one word—three letters—at that I started on my journey eager to add another chapter to the book termed "adventure." But it was for different on any previous assignment—including several of the still variety of the good old days.

Reporters have habits of eating together. But in order to get on the inside of the facts one must know the real dope. Perhaps it is because they are news fiends. Perhaps they figure that if one falls to hear through both ears—his pal will grasp the scandal, robbery or whatever concerned flashes through the lunch room. At any rate they are just plain people, with a smile for all, and especially for a city editor cut of pie.

In company with a co-worker I entered a local noodle parlor. With both ears here and to be out of the ordinary because most people order noodles, asked for pie. The young woman who waited on us after waving her language in regular ocean style, informed us that she had but one kind of pie left and it was electric pie.

Electric pie? Being an ex-gob, I scratched my upper deck but was unable to ever recall of ever having heard of a sweet with that name. My co-worker was also stupid.

We both expected something shocking. And we were right. The pie contained several handfuls of currants—and unless we miss our guess—the cook must have stood in one corner of the room and thrown the currants into the crust—because they were as scarce as German marks.

TRY ANOTHER.

Disgusted, we entered another cafe. This one was all class. You know all Fifth Avenue style. The cafe was well fortified with demure misses and one allged clever young girl, perhaps about seventeen summers—and Lord knows how many winters—emiled sweet and said: We have apple, raisin, coconut cream, pineapple, blackberry, chocolate, custard, peach, mince and dewberry pie.

"Blackberry," we chorused, as if we had several rehearsals.

It surely was a black berry, too, "cause it had enough crust to start a bakery all its own. Shoe shops are noted for tough leather, but the crust on that pie—oh boy, bring on the drill sets.

YOU GOT THE CRUST.

And on leaving, the demure miss said: "You tell 'em pie face, you've got the crust."

Not being able to devour more than six cuts of pie during the first day, we halted our visit, that is as far as pie eating was concerned.

In one of the cafes two of the twentieth century type—you know cane, kid gloves, spats, silk hankie, derby and so forth—entered and ordered pie to match their vests. One ordered peach while the other ordered blackberry pie.

SOME PIES.

And after a tramp around the lanes of the city I was informed that Ogden devoured more than 800 pies daily, which in round pie figures is 4000 cuts daily, each pie being divided into five sections.

Of the entire list blackberry appears to be the greatest seller. Coconut cream, raisin and apple are also good sellers. Custard is said to be the poorest seller.

One of the young women employed in one of the "pie" houses informed me that young children always ask for blackberry pie, in order that they may decorate their clothes.

Young women also eat the fancy pie, such as coconut, pineapple cream and the like, while the husky youth of the city eat the ole shoe leather varieties such as raisin, apple and electric pie.

Ogden is now a leading pie center as well as a great industrial center. More than 25,560 pies are devoured here yearly—which is some number. If you have a sweet tooth—try your luck—and if you want to be shocked—try an electric.

WELLING TALKS AT FARM OUTING

Congressman Urges Upon Farmers Necessity of Strong Organization

Congressman Milton H. Welling, addressed a large audience composed of agriculturalists from Weber county and scores of people from Ogden at the Lorin Farr Park pavilion last night. He was the speaker of the evening at the Farm Bureau County School annual fair, and while arrangements were not made for his speaking until it was too late to announce his visit, hundreds were present to hear his address.

URGERS ORGANIZATION

Farmers, according to Congressman Welling, must organize. Capital and labor are organized, and both are represented by national organizations. Farmers, the producers of materials which represent the life blood of the nation, must also organize, and must pull together for their own interest, he contended.

Necessity for organization, with the view of becoming a factor in the welfare of the country at large and the west specifically was called to the attention of the farmers by Congressman Welling. At present, he pointed out, eastern legislators, not realizing and knowing the problems of the west, have acted vigorously against proposed reclamation projects and other important matters which would mean millions of dollars added to the treasury of the United States.

During the greater part of his address, Congressman Welling dwelt upon the necessity for creating proper facilities for adequate irrigation and also showed the necessity for reclaiming lands through drainage.

MARKETING CONDITIONS

Among other things, he recommended an adjustment in marketing conditions so that the prices are not jumped exorbitantly between the farmers who produce foodstuffs, and the consumers.

He said he had been investigating the cold storage situation and had discovered that produce from farmers, especially in the line of dairy products and other commodities which can be successfully placed in cold storage, were purchased at a low price from the farmers. The articles are then placed in cold storage, he contended, and released in quantities small enough to maintain a short market, with resulting high prices. Farmers, if properly organized, could institute legislation which would establish a fair rate of profit on foodstuffs handled in this manner, and the result would benefit not only the producer, but the consumer as well.

He complimented the officials in charge of the Farm Bureau County School affair, and also spoke of the enthusiasm and the neighborly spirit displayed throughout.

The exhibits were highly praised by Congressman Welling.

Allice Brown and Hugh Stephens, who gave exhibitions of old-time dances at the First ward primary pageant in the Weber Normal college.
