

MANY THINGS LOST ON RAILROAD LINES; CHILDREN INCLUDED

By AL WARDEN

Forgetfulness is sometimes costly. At least that is the opinion of railroad officials throughout the United States—on steam lines—electric lines—city and country.

Just a few weeks ago an Ohio couple, on their honeymoon, left a handbag, containing $5,000 in currency, in one of the passenger cars of a westbound limited. Valuable jewelry, including several diamonds, were also listed in the lost column of daily newspapers.

WOMEN TO BLAME
The women were to blame—that is, if the story as retold here is true. But in most cases where articles are lost on trains, the woman is always the chief character in the plot. The opinions of railroad men at least point toward the women.

How many travelers forget valuables while en route to various points on the passenger cars? A small percentage of them is the answer. The lost article department of every railroad is always "flushed." That is, they are always uncovering new articles found on the trains by forgetful passengers.

The conductor, however, is always the "goat." Only a few days ago some passengers arrived in Ogden from the east. In the car, which was a chair car and which was crowded to capacity, was a mother and her babe. The mother in a hurry—perhaps to meet a relative or a friend, or some one who departed from the train minus the baby.

Friend conductor proved a hero. He entered the car to make his final round before reporting to the depot only to hear in the best of strident tones—

"B-l-a-a-a-a-a-a! B-l-a-a-a-a-a-a! B-l-a-a-a-a-a-a!"
Dismayed, the conductor tiptoed to the end of the car there to find the young baby, perhaps 2 months old, sobbing for mother.

WALKS THE FLOOR
He was the "goat." At least, that is what was informed by several representatives of the Union depot. For more than four hours he walked the floor, tried to be Al Jolson or Wanda Lynn, but his entertaining features proved futile, as far as stopping the howling is concerned.

Several hours later, when the temporary papa was about ready to send out the S. O. S., "mother" arrived on the scene.

She thanked the conductor for his fatherly services and with an, "Oh, I'm so proud of you," resumed her journey.
If a woman would forget her baby, she would forget almost anything of value, in a moment of excitement, but in all my years of experience and I have a good many—this is the richest of my career," said the conductor.

School children en route to school oftentimes forget their school books. Perhaps this is done with a purpose—especially if Bill, or Jim, or Mary is not prepared to stand before the class and recite on some particular subject. But, on the other hand, it is a daily occurrence for students to depart from the depot with a part of the west minus their books. Some even go as far as to leave their lunches behind, said to relate.

UMBRELLAS LEAD
Umbrellas are said to be the leaders in the lost article department, although overcoats and wraps of other natures are also lost at various times. One woman recently lost her rain gear on a westbound train and refused to retire, minus her "retiring equipment."

Traveling salesmen seldom lose their traveling bags. This is true perhaps because they are always on the job in all business matters—and selling is one of their chief essentials. In order to "peddle" their goods they are required to have their samples on deck and in the entire history of the local depot but two cases of salesmen losing their bags have been recorded. Sometimes the goods are held for more than eighteen months, the law requiring that they be held at least one year before they are offered at the "old horse sale," as it is known in railroad circles.

SOME LOSE MONEY
On one of the well known lines a few years ago a wallet containing more than $20,000 was found by a conductor. He turned the prize into the lost article department, where the owner, craned and worried, found his prize. This has also been duplicated in other parts of the country.

And so, if you go on a long journey, and if you have just been married, and you are lucky enough to have a few thousand coppers, or dollars, in your wife's purse, take pains in seeing that you don't lose it. Many a heart has been broken, other than by the hazards of love-making.

SALOONS MOVE TO OTHER LANDS

Organization Would Revoke Papers of Citizens Who Sell Liquor

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Resolutions demanding that congress enact laws providing for the cancelling of the citizenship papers of Americans who go to foreign countries "to engage in business outlawed in this country" were adopted today by the American section of the World Prohibition Federation, meeting here in conjunction with the International Congress Against Alcoholism.

The resolutions also asked that such persons be deprived of the protection of the American government and that as far as possible they be restrained from representing themselves as Americans.

The resolution said many American brewers and distillers who had been "virtually expelled" here were returning to business in foreign lands "thereby giving a wrong impression of the attitude of the American people toward the liquor business."

Bad Weather Not Winter's Beginning
Cheer up and lamenteth not for J. Cecil Aker, meteorologist in charge of the Salt Lake weather bureau, gave assurance that the storms of the past few days are not to be looked upon as the beginning of winter, but as moisture providers for fall ranges and pastures that were greatly in need of the wetness.

Tomatoes and alfalfa seed, still in fields, may suffer if the frost becomes too pronounced, he states, but the rains will be of assistance to beet growers, loosening the ground so that the beets can be readily pulled. The storms have been general throughout northern Utah and Nevada with the precipitation reaching more than 1.05 inches here in two days.

October's bright blue weather will be a reality this year in addition to being a poetical utterance, Mr. Aker claims.

GAME LID LIFTED
WINNIPEG, Can., Sept. 25.—Three years' sanctuary by virtue of provincial statutes prohibiting the shooting of prairie chickens in Manitoba, will be raised this autumn and sportsmen will have one week in which to shoot without fear of itinerant game guardians and lesser minions of the law.

By order in council the provincial government will declare an open season for prairie chickens from October 15 to 22 inclusive, and by so doing make it legal to shoot chicken for the first time in Manitoba since 1917 when the lid was put on as a result of the scarcity of the birds in Manitoba.

ROOT'S ARRIVAL TO CAUSE STIR

His Activity at the Hague and Harding's Views Produce Interest

By MARK SULLIVAN

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Elihu Root is due in New York on the steamer Rotterdam. Considering that Mr. Root had in writing the plank of the Republican platform on the league of nations and the part he has more recently had as an agent of the league in setting up the new court of international justice, Mr. Root's return, and what he may have in his mind as matters of public importance, it is probably doubtful whether Mr. Root will give the contents of his mind to the public. Throughout his stay in Europe he avoided interviews and even declined invitations to dinners at which public speeches were to be made. The only public address he made during his stay in Europe was at the unveiling of the Lincoln monument in England. Probably his motive in following this policy has been fear lest anything he should say might be used in the political campaign here in America, either for offense or defense. Mr. Root naturally if he could help it would not want to see the International Court of Justice made a football in the American political campaign. It is believed, however, that soon after his return Mr. Root may be expected to confer with Senator Harding and that thereafter Mr. Harding will take a further step toward making fuller and more clear the Harding plan for America for the direction of permanent peace.

PROCEDURE IF ELECTED
In fact it is inferred by those who have followed Senator Harding's utterances closely that if he should be elected he will be ready within a few days after his election to name an unofficial commission to confer with the league of nations. There is to be a meeting of the league on November 15.

Concerning the new court of international justice which Mr. Root is the agent for the league of nations has been dominant in forming much of comment in American papers has been wide of the mark. There is to be a meeting of the league on November 15.

Some of the more excitable republican papers have stated that since this is agency of league of nations they will have none of it. It may safely be said that this extreme irconcilable attitude is not at all the attitude of those republican leaders who are both more numerous as well as more thoughtful and more responsible.

ROOT IS CAREFUL
Mr. Root has apparently been careful to build into the structure of this new International Court of Justice elements of permanence which would enable it to endure even if the league itself should fail. It would undoubtedly be insisted that Mr. Root shares that desire for the league to fall which, in the present violence of a political campaign is found frequently in the utterances of some republican leaders.

Of course, you need only read that plank in the Republican platform which Mr. Root wrote as well as some of his previous utterances to know that Mr. Root believes that the league has grave faults, both of construction and of principle. But it can be inferred with equal confidence from a close study of the structure of the court which Mr. Root has just set up that he believes certain parts of the league of nations are useful and ought to be preserved and not discarded.

ROOT HIGH SPIES
There are two or three high spots in what Mr. Root has just done which have attracted attention. In the first place, Mr. Root revived and set on its feet the old Hague Court of arbitration of 1878 and 1907. This Hague court of arbitration is a different institution from the new court of international justice. American comment has frequently confused the two, the difference between a court of arbitration and a court of justice is too technical to go into here. It is sufficient to say that the Hague court of arbitration expired with the beginning of the war in 1914 and has since opened its doors until Mr. Root revived it and set it to functioning this summer. This thing Mr. Root did in what may be called his private capacity, and not in his capacity as an agent of the league of nations.

Having revived the old Hague court of arbitration, Mr. Root then set about creating the new court of international justice. And the significant fact is that he has tied these two courts together in a manner which has almost wholly escaped the attention of American comment. Mr. Root has provided that judges for the new international court of justice shall be chosen by the following mechanism: In the first place, the members of the old Hague court will nominate a panel of judges for the new court of international justice. Out of this panel named by the old Hague court, the council and the assembly of the league of nations will pick fifteen who will actually be the judges for the new court of international justice. The function for the league will be solely to pick fifteen out of thirty or forty originally nominated by the old Hague court. It is the old panel of judges. The league of nations is restricted to picking fifteen of the panel originally nominated by the old Hague court.

Comment in America and particularly the comment of the more violently irconcilable republican newspapers, has dwelt exclusively on the part that the council and the assembly of the league of nations will have in selecting the judges of the new court. They have missed what is much more important, namely, the part that the old Hague court has in naming the judges. The net of it is that even if the league of nations should not fare well, even if some of its more important functions should cease, even if nothing more remained of the league of nations than a mere formality, under all these contingencies Mr. Root's new court of international justice could go on. It could go on as an addition to the old Hague court.

The only function of the league of nations essential to the continuance of the new court would be a secretary and an occasional meeting of the representatives of the big and little nations to select fifteen judges out of the panel originally nominated by the old Hague court. And if even this part for league of nations should fail, it would be a matter of minor importance to delegates from the big and little nations to two bodies called for the specific purpose of taking concurrent action in the selection of judges for the court of international justice.

To your correspondent it has always seemed that there is unmistakable harmony between what Senator Harding has been saying and what Mr. Root has been doing. There is unmistakable identity between the words for operation platform and of Senator Harding about extending the function of the old Hague court of arbitration and on the other hand, the details of what Mr. Root has actually been doing in Europe.
