

Airman's Dog Mourns GUARDS PILOT'S COAT Refuses to Leave It

By AL WARDEN

What is to become of the dog? This is the question that is agitating the minds of members of the United States air mail service. The animal in question was the property of Pilot Walter Stevens who was killed at Toledo recently when he crashed as he went to pick up the mail of a comrade.

At Rock Springs, Wyo., the faithful dog still waiting beside his master's coat—waiting for the master who will never return.

LEAVES PET BEHIND

Three weeks ago Stevens was coming west "ferrying" one of the first planes in preparation for the transcontinental air mail service. In the plane was his faithful companion—his dog. They were inseparable. In effecting the landing at Rock Springs the landing gear of the plane was smashed. It then became necessary for this aviator to take another plane east and for the first time he was forced to leave his "pet" behind. The aviator, however, proposed to pick up the dog on his return west, which was to be his last journey in the air service and which resulted fatally. When the body of the noted air man arrived at Rock Springs en route to the coast the faithful dog was taken to the casket where he is said to have displayed almost human intelligence in realizing that his master was gone. Tears filled the eyes of those about the casket when the dog buried his head in his paws and whined. He is still demonstrating his faithfulness by guarding his owner's coat apparently harboring the forlorn hope that some miracle may yet bring his master back.

DEFENDS DOG

Many tributes have been paid to the "dog" by eminent men who have come to realize the faithfulness of the canine to the human race. During the war an agitation was started to kill all dogs because it was claimed that they were consuming much food that should be used for the human race. This movement spurred many writers to defend the "dog." One of the most important was the offering of the well known K. C. B. in a New York publication which says:

"I wonder how many thousands and hundreds of thousands of men and women and children all over this land will find today a little brighter and their hearts a little lighter because of the dog. And I wonder how many men in our training camps and how many men across the seas are wondering if the promise that somebody gave that their canine friend would be cared for is being kept."

"And I wonder if perhaps it wouldn't be better that we should suffer and hunger a little than that we should live into a time when our hearts would say and our consciences would cry, 'old man, that price of food has increased so much that we must kill you.'"

"You'll call this the maudlin, some of you, but if I had my choice to live in the world that would make demand of such sacrifice and heed it not or to go my way down the scale from the depths of which, no path leads back, I'd go that way, for it might be I'd have a fear that when age crept on, and trembling hands and weakened limbs had set me down as a useless thing, there might arise some patriot who would point me out as worth much less than my subsistence."

"And if it happens that while I live the time should come when hunger stalks, I'll share what I have with my dog. And if this he maudlin, you may mark me down as a maudlin thing and you may add that I one time cried at the grave of a dog and was unashamed."

NEW BUICKS APPEAR IN IMPROVED FORM

"For twenty years the Buick Motor Company has adhered steadfastly to definite principles of motor car design and manufacture," says E. T. Strong, General Sales Manager Buick Motor Co.

And the highest pinnacle in this long period of Buick development has been reached in the new line for Nineteen Twenty One.

"The casual observer on the street or in the showroom will note that the most striking change is in the new lines of the body, top, radiator, hood and cowl, which blend into a harmonious whole of rare and graceful beauty. Yet, there is nothing spectacular or radical in the new lines and those familiar with Buick methods will understand that the outward appearance merely betokens the inner goodness of the new Buick.

"Throughout the entire chassis, mechanical changes have been introduced wherever possible to make for easier adjustments and care of working parts. For example, the clutch can now be readily adjusted with a wrench directly beneath the floor board.

"It is no longer necessary for one to get under the car in order to drain oil from the crank case. Just inside of the hood there is a handle which operates the plug in the crank case. In a similar way, water may be drained from the radiator by turning an extended handle placed within convenient reach.

"Another illustration of Buick attention to detail is seen in the accessibility of batteries in closed cars, which are provided with a small door in the floor board over the battery box.

"Owing to the growing demand for a more roomy and luxurious roadster, the new Model Twenty-One-Forty-Four has been studiously designed with the result that it is distinctly a new model. As remarkable as it is with its improved lines, it still possesses the characteristic Buick style.

"The rear of the body has been widened, making it exceptionally comfortable for two passengers besides the driver. These are two spacious compartments one back of the seat and another beneath the rear deck, that affords ample storage space.

"The five-passenger open car, Model Twenty-One-Forty-Five, has a graceful low appearance. The driving compartment and the tonneau have been re-arranged slightly to provide more room and the seats have been changed so as to afford the most comfortable position for driver and passengers.

NO STRIKE AT CAN FACTORY

Eastern Trouble Will Not Affect Ogden, Says Local Superintendent

No trouble is being experienced at the Ogden plant of the American Can company, as the result of what is said in the east to be a general strike of 3,000 machinists employed by the company in its fifty-six plants throughout the country, according to a statement made yesterday by John C. Leonard, superintendent of the Ogden plant.

Mr. Leonard stated there were less than ten men employed at the Ogden plant as machinists and they have no grievance or objection. He further declared that he expected no action on the part of his men, either to strike or go out in sympathy with the eastern machinists. The present period, he said, was the extreme dull season and the men felt fortunate in getting steady employment.

"The eastern dispatch stated that a general strike against the company was called yesterday, involving 5,000 men, by the committee of the International Association of Machinists, and approved by the convention of the association, now in session at Rochester, N. Y.

The strike was said by the officers of the union to be the result of dissatisfaction at the Newark, N. J. plant of the company.

Efforts to reach an agreement are said to have been made at conferences in New York City and the other in San Francisco. Among the plants said to be affected by the strike are those in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

EXPERIENCES IN UTAH DESCRIBED

Tom Fitch Writes on Beehive State in Los Angeles Paper

Under the caption, "Moses Gathered by a Rolling Stone," Tom Fitch writing in the Los Angeles Times, has the following to say of experiences in Utah.

In 1872 professional business called me to Salt Lake City as counsel in an case involving the title of a valuable mining property. While there, I was employed by Brigham Young to assist in the defense of criminal actions against Mormons in the courts, and the intimate relations of counsel and client caused me to obtain an inside view of Mormonism in its commercial, its social, and its religious aspects.

STRUGGLE BEGINS.

The struggle between the United States government to expiate polygamy and of the Mormon leaders to retain it was then in progress. The leader of the anti-Mormon forces was a New York lawyer named McKean, who had been appointed chief justice of Utah territory. He was appropriately designated as a "mission-jurist." He was a judge with a mission to carry out a judge's duty with a purpose as of complete steel. With implacable and unwavering determination he subordinated his judicial duties and his judicial character to the fulfillment of his "mission" and the execution of his "policy." He possessed sufficient knowledge of law to carry out a judge's duty with a personal courage to forward his plans, but he was utterly destitute of the spirit of impartial jurisprudence. He made a series of rapid-fire decisions to accomplish his purpose of putting an end to polygamous marriages.

WHAT MCKEAN DECIDED.

McKean decided that the United States district attorney and not the local district attorney was the proper prosecuting officer, that the United States marshal and not the county sheriff was the proper officer to summon a jury; that the marshal was not obliged to follow the territorial law and select jurors from the assessment roll; that the court could prescribe the method of selecting jurors, and he ordered the clerk of his court to issue to the United States Marshal an open venire to pick jurors.

He ruled that in prosecutions for bigamy or polygamy, not only those who practiced it, but those who believed in it should be excluded from the jury box. He ruled that the wife might be a witness against the husband; that marriage might be proved by general reputation, and that the statute of limitations should be no defense against charges of polygamy.

The mineral deposits of Utah had attracted a large number of active, adventurous men, many of whom were unscrupulous, many of whom were reckless, and some of whom were foes to industry, order and law. This class, finding the federal officers arrayed against the Mormons, placed themselves on the side of the federal courts and officers. Elements which are usually antagonistic blended themselves together. The officers of justice found allies in men who, under different circumstances, would have been their foes. The barroom and the gambling halls shouted hosannas to the courts; the drunkard espoused the cause of temperance and from them the marshal picked a grand jury which proceeded to indict Brigham Young.

and other Mormon leaders, not only for polygamy, but for murder.

When these indictments were presented in court, I moved to quash them on the ground that the grand jury which found them had been selected and impaneled in violation of law. From the refusal of McKean to grant the motion I took an appeal to the United States supreme court and that tribunal sustained my contention.

LITTLE BELIEFENCE.

Except in the doctrine of polygamy, the Mormon faith does not differ materially from that of the Methodist, the Baptist, the Presbyterian or that of any Protestant denomination. The Mormons accept the Old Testament entire, with the Book of Mormon added. The New Testament they supplement with the revelations of Joseph Smith.

The success of Mormonism may be attributed to the fact that it was something more than a theology. It was a co-operative industrial society, an educational, social, business, mutual improvement and benefit society. It not only promised spiritual benefit to its followers, but it agreed to promote their temporal welfare. It found employment for its converts. It instructed them where and how to work. It saw to it that they did not lack for food, shelter and clothing. It furnished them with social and amusement. Nowhere were lyric or dramatic performances better rendered or better attended.

In Utah every little town of 1000 inhabitants had its opera house, and the local dramatic and musical entertainments given by home talent were often far above mediocrity. You might listen to "Hamlet" or to burnt cork minstrelsy. One of the best Lady Macbeths I ever heard was rendered by a Mormon girl named Carrie Carr. And the mother of Maude Adams of some-what historic fame was a Mormon woman, who was at one time leading lady on the stage of the Salt Lake City theatre.

NO FRENCH PLAYS.

Yet you would never see on a Mormon stage an adaptation of one of those modern French dramas in which furniture, fornication and forgiveness are all mixed up. And when dances were given, they were the stately minuets of Shakespeare, of Addison, or of Goldsmith. The half-clad performers of the bunny-hug, the turkey-trot, the sinful-spin and the tango, never capered in Mormon dance halls.

There are in the world 400,000,000 Buddhists who believe that God is a spiral staircase of whirling atoms, but you try it!

To Women Who Overdo

Thousands of American women in our homes are daily sacrificing their lives to duty. In order to keep the home neat and attractive, the children well dressed and tidy, women overdo. Soon a weakness or displacement is brought on and they suffer in silence, drifting along from bad to worse. For forty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved a boon and a blessing to women in this condition, by restoring their systems to a normal healthy condition. Why don't you try it!
