FINANCIAL AID

After having looked after those physically disabled and while still working for further improvement in their condition, your national officers and executive committee took up the question of adjustment of compensation to those who had suffered financially because of their service. The last convention fully recognized this obligation on the part of the country toward the ex-service man, but adopted a policy of watchful waiting on the implied promise that congress would act. The national executive committee 99 days later realized nothing had been done, nor was congress likely to do anything. They therefore abandoned the policy of watchful waiting and worked out the four-fold, optional plan covering land settlement, home aid, vocational training and adjustment of compensation. In presenting this plan to congress it was requested that each feature be made as liberal as was consistent with the welfare of the country. As a result of the most active work on the part of your national officers and state officers, this plan was finally embodied in a bill which passed the house a few days before adjournment of congress but too late for action by the senate.
