HERE ARE CHIEF PRINCIPLES OF HOME RULE BILL

The fundamental principles laid down by the British government in the Irish home rule bill are:

First—That the people of the six Ulster Counties shall not be brought administratively under an outside parliament in Ireland.

Second—That there shall not be any weakening of the reservations which have been made by the government for the purpose of safeguarding the vital interests of the United Kingdom.

At the time of the introduction of the measure it was stated that the home rule bill was intended to give Ireland was based primarily on the declaration of Premier Lloyd-George in a speech last December that “Great Britain can not accept separation.”

Under the bill two legislatures would be set up, one for the north of Ireland and the other for the south.

If less than half of the members of either legislature are validly elected or fail to swear allegiance to the king, the king may dissolve the parliament, and the government in the interim of a committee appointed by the king.

A “council for Ireland,” composed of forty members, half of whom would be selected by each parliament, also is provided for. The powers of the council would be limited to those granted it by the two legislatures.

BOY DECLARES HE SAW FATHER COMMIT CRIME

Stepmother Struck Down and Body Buried in Well, He Says

KEEPS STORY SECRET 4 YEARS THROUGH FEAR

Alleged Slayer Disappears October 30; Then Son Makes Disclosure

LANGDON, New Hampshire, Nov. 12.—An abandoned well on the farm of William B. Whitney, which had been filled with rock and debris, was re-opened today by county and city authorities in a search for the body of Whitney's second wife. The search was ordered by Sheriff Solbeck, his N. Herd, as a result of a declaration made to him by John Whitney, 15-year-old son of William B. Whitney by a former marriage. He says he saw his father strike down his stepmother in their home four years ago, take her body to the hayrack and later bury it in the well.

“WHITNEY DISAPPEARS.”
Whitney disappeared on October 30 after eight years of residence here in which he gained a reputation as a solid citizen. In his wake came bankruptcy petitions against him, and charges that he had accumulated mortgages on his home. The son went to county authorities with the story which he said he had kept secret until the night of death by his parents. The family was originally named Doolittle, according to the son, and lived at Madison, Maine, where the mother died. The father was charged with passing a worthless check, his son said, and calling his children to him told them he was leaving for the west and that their names thereafter should be Whitney. He went to Montana and lived there several years, returning east in 1912 with a second wife, and settled here.

“BOY SEES ATTACK.”
On the night of June 30, 1916, Whitney and his wife went to a lecture, returning late. John told the county collector that he was awakened in his bedroom over the kitchen by a dispute, and looked through the hot air registers in the ceiling. He said he saw his father grasp a stick of firewood and beat his stepmother with it.
