

Her Daughter and His Son
A Great Married Life Story by
IDA H. McGLONE GIBSON

Ann Lands a Job. I suppose I must have been very dull or very young and unsophisticated because I did not understand what he said. I supposed "check girl" meant cashier work and I never had heard the phrase "you're on" before, but I decided to be game and said: "I shall be very glad to work for your dinner, but will have to have some money to pay for my lodging."

"Here's a pal for you, Mamie. Now quit yelling for help. The girl turned quickly and I liked her at a glance. Her Irish face and broad smile gave me comfort immediately, and I thought, "There's someone who will believe my story."

Cake and bread tins have a tendency to rust in the corners if not carefully cared for. Very often it isn't necessary to wash a cake pan after baking. If a spatula is used to scrape the pan clean, the tin will be in perfect shape to use next time.

Dorothy Dix Talks
FOR THAT TIRED FEELING

By DOROTHY DIX, the World's Highest Paid Woman Writer. A young woman wants to know what to do when you've got that tired feeling and cannot stop and rest. She says that she is weary unto death of her job, that she has come to hate her supervisor as if it were some cruel god before which she was offered up daily as a living sacrifice.

PLEECMEN. Pleecemen are out weather it rains or not. They certainly deserve our pity. They have to chase bergiers if you ask them to. Because they're employed by the city. We see them wawking along their feet looking free from all affliction.

BEDTIME STORIES
BY HOWARD R. GARIS

UNCLE WIGGLY AND BOB CAT. Copyrighted, 1920, by McClure News-Paper Syndicate. (By Howard R. Garis.) One day when there was snow on the ground in Woodland, near the Orange Ice Mountains where Uncle Wiggly had his hollow stump bungalow, the old gentleman rabbit started out to look for an adventure.

JUST FOLKS
By Edgar A. Guest

AT THE TOP. It's buckling in and fighting hard that gets a fellow through. It's giving all your thought and strength to do what you have to do. Oh, there's no jolly road to fame, no care-free way to win. The man who wants to reach the top must have a stern set chin. The summit of success is fine and much there is to see there. But he who'd climb up to the crest, must prove his right to be there.

TIME PASSES.

Full soon the bizards will be popping and hanging snow wreaths on our brows and we'll be asked to do our shopping as early as the law allows. It seems no time since bells were ringing proclaiming Christmas peace once more, that happy time when Dad was bringing a ton of Jim-cracks from the store. It seems no time since old Kris Kringle propelled his flivver through the night, the echo of his sleigh bells jingling seems all around me as I write. And soon we're facing Winter burly, and soon each sheet at which I glance will say, "Please do your shopping early, and give the weary clerk a chance." No doubt the children think the seasons have much like snails or turtles raced; but we old lads have sandy reasons for cursing Time's inconstant haste. A summer's gone before we know it, an autumn smiles and then its through, and even a highly moral poet is moved to language warm and blue. The sexton to his rope is clinging to ring in Christmas joy and cheer; and soon the old boy will be clinging some other bell—and we won't hear. The sky is gray; the wind is surly, more desolate the landscape grows, oh, let us do our shopping early, and give the swayed-backed clerks repose.

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS
BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

THE MUSHROOM'S RIDDLE. Of course, there was dancing at Mr. Scarecrow's masquerade party, and everybody had a load of fun. Cobby the Coon had a hard time, however, finding a partner. And so did Wisp Weasel and Snoopy Skunk and Marcy Mink. This little fox was a little bit of a fall, when the harvesting was over and the sweet corn gone 'n' all, and Farmer Smith had cooped up his chickens for the cold weather, Cobby's appetite began to bother him. Besides you know, cold weather makes one hungry as a hunter.

Dr. James I. Vance

My youngest son and his pater spent the day in a rough stream that leaps down the steep sides of the Grandfather mountain. We came home with 80 speckled beauties in our creel. The brook trout is an aristocrat. He is a piscatorial thoroughbred. To seek him in the kind of stream he loves is to be spoiled for other kinds of fishing. This little fish is all action. He is built for speed. There is not a stale minute in the stream when he is in a mood for your fly. And when he is not in such a mood, he'll pester your tempter with his disdain. I have drawn the bait right across his lips as I looked down on him in a limpid pool, and he has not stirred, ut when he wants a fly, he will all but tear him and the rod out of your hand. They lory of this little fish, however, is not his beauty nor his speed, but his fighting instinct. He fairly adores a difficulty. Nothing can stop him. He can swim right up the roaring, racing cataract. He can negotiate a 20-foot fall to my certain knowledge. He will not stay in a placid stream. His home is among the rocks and the swift water and the deep pools and the leaping cascades. It is this fighting instinct that makes him a thoroughbred. I am writing about him because the same thing holds for people. He was ever a fighter, so one fight more, is the spirit of the only aristocracy that is worth having. The soul that sighs for an easy time is a scrub. Give me a lad to whom a difficulty is not a discouragement, but a challenge. He is scheduled to be heard from for the streams of blessing that run down from God's high mountains, of privilege are for him that overcome.

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

They had nut-cracking and fortunes and bobbing for apples, and riddles. The old gentleman rabbit happened to look down, and when he saw some marks in the snow, Mr. Longears caught hold of Nurse Jane by the paw and whispered: "We had better not go on any farther. We'd better go right back to our hollow stump bungalow and stay there until Percival, the Policeman Dog, can arrest him." "Arrest who?" asked Nurse Jane. I don't see anybody who needs arresting." "I don't exactly see him myself," spoke Uncle Wiggly. "But here are the marks of his paws and claws in the snow. It's the white ground many marks of the paws and claws of the Bob Cat, but they hoped he had run far away." So he and Nurse Jane, the muskrat lady carrying her scissors, needles and thread, started back over the snow. They saw on the white ground many marks of the paws and claws of the Bob Cat, but they hoped he had run far away.

Woman's hair is her crowning glory. She's man's crowning glory, too—with a rolling pin. Play safe and "DON'T EVER MARRY"
