amendments. Include representatives from the Cotton Exchange, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, the Merchants' Association, the New York Mercantile Exchange, the National Poultry Association, the National Hay Association, and many other organizations. The joint meeting of these several bodies which appointed the committee to attend the New York conference, adopted resolutions demanding that the responsibility of the railroads be more clearly defined in the new bill of lading than it is under the present law.

The large commercial organizations of the country have expressed deep concern over the situation which has made this conference necessary. George W. Neville, chairman of the 131 of lading committee of the New York Cotton Exchange, in speaking of the situation said he regarded it as a menace to the business of the country. "So many heavy losses have been incurred by those making advances on defective bills of lading," said Mr. Neville, "that bankers in various sections of the country have now refused to make loans on this class of collateral. Then one realizes that the crops of the country are now entirely financed through the medium of 'order' bills of lading, it is obvious that if other banking institutions should adopt a similar policy the commercial and agricultural interests would find themselves in a grave predicament in this matter the consignees are in the same boat with the bankers, for the responsibility of carriers to consignees, bankers or any third party other than the shipper with whom the bill of lading is executed, is at present a matter of grave doubt under numerous court decisions. The highest courts of Alabama, Mississippi and North Carolina hold that parties making advances upon 'order' bills of lading, are responsible for the quantity and quality of the shipment represented. In the majority of the states there is no legislation protecting advances of vast sums in the financing of the crops through the medium of 'order' bills of lading.

The Interstate Commerce Commission now has under consideration proposals for a new uniform bill of lading which it is proposed to require each railroad throughout the United States to issue after January 1. This proposed new uniform bill of lading, while it confers the great benefit of uniformity, does not protect merchants paying bill of lading drafts, bankers making advances on bills of lading or other third parties giving advances on bills of lading. Inasmuch as the Interstate Commerce Commission can only prescribe the form and require the issue of a uniform bill of lading it is necessary to ask Congress for additional legislation to protect the advances on such documents. Merchants and consignees therefore consider it necessary that amendments to the proposed uniform bill of lading be urged upon the Interstate Commerce Commission so as to protect parties advancing value upon such bills of lading and they also deem it absolutely necessary to secure early congressional action upon this subject."
