

FROM EAST VIRGINIA.—It appears that the apprehensions of the people of Accomac and Northampton counties for the grievous consequences that would flow to them from the presence of troops in their midst, were to some extent realized, notwithstanding the happy revocation by President Lincoln of the order to assess on the people of the two counties an amount sufficient to repair the damages done by a party of Confederates from Richmond to the Cape Charles light-house. A dispatch has been received here, respectably attested, stating that on Sunday week a body of troops under the command of Major H. Z. Hagner, Captains Maginnis and Hoyt, and Lieut. Evans, of the artillery, behaved with great violence towards the people of the latter county. In marching from their encampment to the steamer Kennebec, sent to convey them away, the soldiers took with them a large number, (rated at about fifty) of the servants belonging to the citizens and lodged them on board the boats. On the following morning the owners of the slaves, unarmed and defenceless, further than as they were accompanied by the officers of the civil law, visited the boat to induce the military in command to surrender their property. The only redress they got was the forcible seizure by the soldiers of some of their number, who were tossed in a blanket, and the driving off of the remainder. No restraint upon the lawless and outrageous conduct of the soldiers was exercised by any of the military officers, notwithstanding all that passed was within their sight and hearing.—[Nat. Int.

Some of the New York papers are very severe upon the proclamation of President Lincoln suspending the writ of habeas corpus.—The Express says "it is worthy of the days of Queen Elizabeth, and of Charles the 1st, and of James the 2d. The words in it have covert but broad meanings." The Herald and Times have no editorial comments, but the World says that "it is an usurpation of such vast and illimitable proportions that it can cover any outrage upon the rights of American citizens." The Tribune, however, approves of the Proclamation and says: "Again, at a moment of public peril, the strong hand of the President steadies the helm. The Republic is beset by conspirators plotting to weaken its armies. Foiled in attempts at open violence, they have resorted to insidious efforts under cover of the forms of justice. Resistance to the enrollment act comes through the courts. The Habeas Corpus, which descended to us as the shield of personal liberty, is to-day, in the hands of traitors, the two-edged sword of treachery and craft pointed at the heart of the nation. The President seizes it, and suspends it over their heads. Courageously and wisely he resolves that the liberty of the few, if need be, shall be sacrificed for the moment, in order to preserve the liberty of all for all time to come." The Daily News says: "The entire North has been outlawed, and our judicial structure, by one sweep of the Presidential pen, has been demolished. We live hereafter under martial law. Any one wearing the Federal uniform can arrest a citizen 'for any offence against the military,' and the courts of law shall have no power to intervene, &c."

It is understood that a dormant order prohibiting the playing of military bands in the District of Columbia, without the permission of the Military Commander, is to prevail forthwith in consequence of the re-appearance of the serenading mania, which has a tendency to break out whenever a distinguished military or naval individual arrives, no matter what the state of his health may be.

If the reports of correspondents of the Northern papers are to be credited, the Confederates continue to dispute the passage of the Rapidan, not against cavalry, merely, but the whole of the second army corps. It is now reported that it was this corps which engaged the Confederates for several hours on Monday last, at or near Raccoon ford, and that finally the Confederates gave way about five o'clock in the afternoon, leaving the field in the possession of the Federal forces. That General Meade is preparing to advance, as letter writers from Washington and also from the army in the field confidently announce, seems to be probable, from the fact that the sick and wounded are being removed to Washington.—One hundred and fifty of these reached there yesterday, according to the Washington Star, and eleven hundred more were on their way.

The Baltimore American says:—"It has been officially decided at the War Department that the colored troops raised in this State are to be credited to the quota of Maryland. As the enlistment of negro troops is progressing with great rapidity, it is not unlikely the draft will not be enforced in this State."

The news from off Charleston bar would indicate that the reports of a white flag over Moultrie and the occupation of a part of James Island by General Gillmore are entirely unfounded.

Western papers continue to give doleful accounts of the effect of the recent unseasonable frosts out in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois,—but particularly in the last mentioned State. The visitation was not confined to one county, but spread over the whole extent of the country tributary to Chicago. The effect of the damage thus sustained on market values is now known, corn having advanced fully eight cents per bushel, in the face of circumstances which would otherwise have caused a depression in price.

On Tuesday, a "grand national horse fair" commenced on the Fashion Pleasure Grounds, near New York. It was opened with a cavalcade of 200 fine horses. It seems to be pretty much a New York fair.

The sixty-first Philadelphia Book Trade Sale commenced on Tuesday. The Ledger says:—"There was a fair attendance at the opening of the sale, though some of the buyers expected from a distance had not been able to reach the city in time to be present. The bidding was spirited during the sale of most of the invoices, and the prices obtained were considerably in advance of those obtained last year. Many of the books offered were largely duplicated."
