[From the Richmond Examiner Oct. 10.]

"TOBACCO FOR FRANCE.—Viconte de St. Romain has been sent by the French Government to ours to negotiate for the exportation of the tobacco bought for France by French agents. The Confederate States Government has at last consented to allow the tobacco to leave the country, provided the French Government will send its own vessels for it. The latter will send French ships, accompanied by armed convoys. To this the United States Government objects in toto. Viconte de St. Romain is now making his way to New York, to send the result of his mission through the French Consul, to the Emperor. The French frigates in New York are there on this errand."

A Washington letter contradicts the statement about Mr. Romain, the sending of a fleet, &c. It says: The only correct part of the version of the Richmond Examiner is that which relates to the refusal of the Federal Government to let the tobacco leave the port of Richmond. Some three months ago, Mr. Seward, in compliance with the request of Mr. Mercier, agreed to let the tobacco go under the following conditions:—First, the permission to carry it away should not, under any circumstances, be considered by the French Government as a precedent. Secondly, England was not to avail herself of the favor granted to France to make the same demand.

These conditions, I am told, were strictly complied with. France agreed not to renew her purchase of tobacco in Richmond, and England was satisfied to let France take goods which she had bought during the last three years, and which ran the risk of becoming spoiled in the warehouses of Richmond. But while these transactions were taking place, and when everything seemed to have been satisfactorily adjusted, the Cabinet at Richmond changed its mind and refused the permission it had at first granted. I am told, however, that this refusal is only temporary, and will be removed as soon as circumstances will permit."
