

The Northern papers publish the following extract from an article in the Richmond Examiner, on the recent nominations for President of the U. S. and the platforms of the two Conventions:

"Nothing can be plainer than that the Chicago Democrats, like the Baltimore Republicans, deny the right of secession, and declare that our citizens have no civil rights, and ought to be ruled by military law. The difference between them is not a difference of principle, but of expediency only, like the difference between the sun and the wind—the storm having been tried and having failed, it is the sun's turn—but one way or the other the cloak must come off.

It is true that these "platforms" may be considered rather as temporary instruments and agencies for simply getting into power, than as precise and binding engagements of political action. It is also true that some at least of the supporters of these nominations are well known to be warm advocates of peace, Union or no Union: some of them even going the length of maintaining the right of a State to secede. It may further be admitted that if all the Yankee nation resembled McClellan and Pendleton, Seymour and Vallandigham, and if such men had continued to hold the Government of the old Union, there might never have been any secession at all. All this may be so; but in the meantime it is important for us to remember that in their authorized declaration of principles they do call us insurgents (or Rebels,) do deny us, while in 'insurrection,' the rights of States and all other rights whatsoever, and do not breathe the faintest hint of even an armistice, except upon the terms of our coming into a convention with them on the basis of the 'Union.'

"The only practical moral we can draw from all this is, that the Confederate States never had more urgent need of an effective army and a diligent conscription, and vigilant leaders, and all men to the front, than they have at this hour."

The vulgar display of wealth, in jewelry, equipages, "ponies," &c., this season at Newport, is said to have been unexampled. The "shoddy aristocracy," both there and at Saratoga, were, according to the accounts, in all their "glory." They glittered like gaudy butterflies—determined to have their day—while the money lasts.
