But the writer of history is not required to be a political advocate; the less he attempts anything of the kind, the better his history will be. I hope the chapters on the literature of the Polish language, still spoken by upwards of ten millions. RUSKIN'S WEDDING ROMANCE.

The Story of the Eccentric Critic's Marriage and Divorce. John Ruskin did a strangely wayward thing when he consented to get married. He did a really erratic act, and to the public, a most inexplicable thing when he arranged for his divorce. He had accepted some of the loftiest traditions about womanhood that men sometimes read and talk about, and he looked for his ideal companion. One night he met her in the drawing room of a London friend, who, without his knowing it, had brought the young lady to meet the eyes of the great writer.

It was a June night. He was 35, and she looked like a Greek goddess. He was dazzled. She was a tall, graceful girl of 19, with a face and figure as faultless as any of the statues of old. No one ever expected Ruskin to fall in love, and he did not. She was poor, needed a home and its comforts, and so they were married.

Their wedded life was peaceful, friendly, kindly to the highest degree, but there was not a spark of affection to enlighten their existence. She admired the great man who had married and was grateful for the warmth and comfort he showered on her. He worshipped her as he would the marble made life-like by the sculptor's chisel.

There was nothing human about the life they led as husband and wife, and she was a woman who in her heart, like all true women, laughed at the traditions that made her sex love distant worship.

One day Ruskin brought an artist to paint his wife's picture. And the man was Millais, and he was a bright, cheery, handsome fellow, human every inch of him, with a great and absorbing love for the beautiful and a willingness to tell of the beautiful.

He began to paint the portrait of the magnificent woman, and when he had finished he was in love with his friend's wife. Womanlike she saw it, and perhaps she was not full of sorrow and reproach. It was the first tribute of real manly love that had ever laid at her feet.

And Ruskin's ill-widened eyes saw the romance that was weaving around those two lives, and his heart realized how little affection he had lavished on the woman he had made his wife. How he told her that had made his wife. How he told her that he was to make for her, while she lay prone at his feet, is one of the things which only he or she could tell.

It is difficult to obtain a divorce in England, but John Ruskin secured it for her, and one bright morning in the early winter, a month after the divorce was granted, Ruskin stood beside the couple in one of London's quiet churches and saw them made man and wife.

That was a good many years ago, and since then Millais has become such a famous name in the world that it is hard to remember that the earnest, sturdiest friend of the struggling painter had in his toiling days been the man whose wife he had married, and through all the years of Millais' later success and greater honor John Ruskin had been the welcome guest and daily visitor to the man and woman whose lives he so unselfishly crowned with happiness.

It is a strange story, and the world knows little about it, and some men have condemned him, as some women have censured her. But the two men and the two women who knew best were happy and contented with the change that John Ruskin's pure unselfishness brought into their lives. And so the world should not complain—Chicago News.

Dignity and Duty. The following story is told of the archbishop of Canterbury when he was head master of Wellington college. One day the prince consort attended by a single equestrian rode over to Wellington and arrived just as the doctor was about to address his boys. The prince expressed a wish that the master should proceed in his presence. Having with bare head, as etiquette demanded, shown the prince to a seat, he turned to the boys, and raising his cap began lecturing them. Just then the equestrian hurried up and nudged him on the elbow.

"Dr. Benson," said he, "his royal highness is present," whispered the equestrian.

"I am proud to know it," was the answer. The doctor had spoken scarcely a half dozen words before the courtier again broke in:

"Dr. Benson, we all remain uncovered in his royal highness' presence."

"I am his royal highness' most humble and devoted servant," rejoined the doctor, at the same time bowing low, with uncovered head, to the prince.

"But," turning to the boys once more and replacing his cap, "I am also my boys' head master."—London Tit-Bits.

Memory's Impressions on the Brain. It is computed by leading physiologists that since one-third of a second suffices to produce an impression on the brain, a man who has lived to be 100 years old must have collected upon the folds of his brain matter at least 9,457,200,000 impressions. Or, again, take off one-third for sleep, and we still find not less than 6,311,400,000 indentations—memory's finger marks—on and in the brain. This would give 3,155,700,000 separate living impressions to the man who lives to be 100 years old.

Allowing an average weight of four pounds to the brain, deduct one-fourth for blood and other vessels and attachments, and another fourth for external integument, and we still find that each separate grain of brain matter contains 2,053,440 impressions of ideas. Of course, these calculations and general deductions must be applied according to the temperament of the individual. Well, it is said that "divine handiwork is grandly shown in the wonderful faculty which we call memory."—Philadelphia Press.

Shoe Superstitions. When a new pair of shoes is brought home, never place them higher than your head if you would have good luck while wearing them, and never blacken them, before you have had on both shoes, or else you may meet with an accident and perhaps sudden death.

It is said that the old maids believe that when their shoes become untied and keep coming untied, it is true that their sweethearts are talking and thinking about them.

The sweetheart, when on his way to see his lady love, should be stub his right toe, will surely be welcome, but if he stubs his left toe, he may know he is not wanted.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Reducing a Minister's Salary. A certain church in this city reduced the salary of its pastor $50 after his wife died because his expenses wouldn't be as large. Soon after he had a call to another field, and a new pastor was a large family came. But the salary was not raised, on the contrary, it was cut again, doubtless because his children would not be able to work—Springfield Graphic.

Maori Courtship. Among the Maoris the girl generally begets the courting. I have often seen the pretty little love letter fall at the feet of a lover—it was a little bit of wax made into a half knot. "Yes" was made by pulling the knot tight; "no" by leaving the "matrimonial noose" alone.—Edward Tregear in Popular Science Monthly.
