JUDGE LAMB AND THE COURT JANITORS.

One of the most admirable characteristics of Virginians in the present, as in the past, is their loyalty to faithful servants, whether of high or low degree.

When Judge Lamb was elected judge of the Chancery Court of the city of Richmond, he found installed as janitor old Stephen, one of the few remaining representatives of the old-time negro servant—faithful, respectful, loyal and true.

Recently efforts have been made, it is said, to coerce Judge Lamb into the removal of this faithful servant and the appointment in his stead of some white Democrat, and it has been hinted and suggested that should the Judge fall to heed this warning his tenure of office would be endangered.

To his credit be it said, Judge Lamb has steadfastly refused to heed this threat and persists in his determination to retain the present janitor of his court, so long as the man continues to be faithful and respectful in his service.

which it is threatened. And he adds: The movement for a conference could very properly originate in the South. This section is the backbone of the national Democracy, and its electoral vote is essential to the success of the party.

If Southern Democrats should determine that in the Presidential election next year the silver question will not be given 25-50 prominence, or better still, if they should decide to eliminate it as an issue, they may prefer the way for a united party to continue the agitation...

This is sound sense and those who have the true interests of the party at heart will be impressed by it. It is the duty of the Democratic party to win, if it may do so without abandoning its principles.

The Populists, if unrestrained, would lead the country into Socialism; the Republicans, if unrestrained, would lead it into monarchy. It is the Democratic party, and that party only, which takes its stand and says to Socialism on the one hand, and to Republicanism on the other: Thus far and no farther.

The Democratic party has been more active than otherwise a minority party, and yet who shall say that it has not performed a great mission in this government. Nor is its mission as a minority party by any means ended.

The path of duty is the path of safety. Let the party stand by its principles and preserve its integrity and it will have honor and victory even in defeat.
