His Wash in a Hat.

"The other night," said a young lawyer at luncheon yesterday, "put on evening clothes, despite the heat. As my family is out of town, and as I am eternally forgetting to have washing done, it struck me while dressed that I would pass a laundry on my way down town, and that it would be well to cart along and there a few well-aimed articles. I packed them in a dozen pieces in the crown of my tall hat. Then I sallied forth, immaculate and elegant, and from that moment all thought of my laundry deserted me."
