Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

FATHER OF LIBRARY

Honorable Name Bestowed on the Late Senator Voorhees.

To His Untiring Efforts the Country Is Indebted for the Congressional Library, the World's Finest Edifice.

[Special Washington Letter.]

MANY wise men believe that under the vision of Omnipotence and Omniscience no accidents occur. All enlightened people believe that there is being worked out a plan not only for this world, but for the universe of which we are a part.

In the development of the plans of which we can only catch glimmerings by studying the developments of the centuries it is conceded that there are invisible powers at work. For example, three centuries were systematically toiled off from time into eternity before Christianity was made respectable by being placed on the throne of the Caesars. But the plan is now visible to those who study the past with care.

Another thing strange and inexplicable of purpose—it required the sufferings and deaths of 400,000 people in Cuba in order that the young giant of the western hemisphere might be thoroughly aroused to drive forth the oppressor nation, so that, by the sufferings of 400,000 human beings, the millions of the future in Cuba shall be free from the racks and tortures of injustice and infamy. Back of it all is the plan of the invisible power.

People in civilized states know that the harmless looking trolley wire carries with it an invisible power which moves cars, and which may deal death to any human being who might grasp it. So also are the invisible but known powers of gravitation and attraction. We are surrounded by influences of which we know but an infinitesimal part.

The brain of John L. Smithmeyer was saturated with visions of architectural splendor such as man had never dreamed before; and the invisible powers which make for the beautiful taught him how to outline the plans of the great congressional library which now evokes the plaudits of all who see its glorious perfections in every nook and cranny, from foundation to dome. Back of all plans there must be motives. Back of this architectural wonder there were motives and motive powers.

Victor Hugo gives to Napoleon neither credit for Austerlitz nor censure for Waterloo. He says that Napoleon was a mighty medium for the working out of plans and purposes which were not revealed even to his marvelous military brain. Napoleon was used by the invisible powers to accomplish results. It remains not for military men, but philosophers, to discover in due season why those victories and defeats were placed upon the stage of history. Victor Hugo's idea was voiced by Shakespeare when he said: "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players."

The real motives of the invisible powers we may never know, but we can discern the motives of human beings as they play their parts and pass away. And now we discover the human motive powers back of the great congressional library. See them grouped together for the first time.

James Voorhees, son of the great senator from Indiana, Daniel W. Voorhees, says: "Father's great ambition during the last 20 years of his life was to leave the congressional library as a monument to his statesmanship. He did not want any of the credit due to Librarian Spofford nor to Architect Smithmeyer. He wanted to have enduring fame by receiving credit for his years of work in endeavoring to induce the congress to see the necessity of a national library and a fitting home for that library. He lived to see the library begun, and told me that he feared that he might not live to see it finished. But he did live to see it in all of its loveliness, and expressed to me the hope that some day due credit would be given him for his part in that creation of utility and beauty."

Senator Voorhees spoke thus not only to his sons, but to his friends. On one occasion he said to the writer: "While all of his power and glory as the ruler of England's king have passed away and been forgotten, Cardinal Wolsey's monument of Christ college endures and will endure forever. What he did for the cause of education and enlightenment is everlasting. What he did for the aggrandizement of Cardinal Wolsey only brought him bitterness and most poignant grief." Then the senator said, slowly and deliberately: "All that I have done in the fields of politics and statecraft will fade away, but the congressional library will endure forever. I hope that my name will endure with it, for 20 years of my life—well-nigh half of a man's active career—I have devoted to the accomplishment of that great good for my country and for the world."

The visible human motive power back of the library building was Senator Voorhees. That his name will be linked with the edifice now seems certain. A local artist has painted upon a canvas six by twelve feet a group entitled: "The promoters of the congressional library building." The central figure is that of Senator Daniel W. Voorhees, chairman of the special joint committee on the library, a committee which existed for 17 years. Senator Voorhees drew about him, gradually, the strongest men in both houses of the congress, until he had a special committee which could accomplish legislation. The senator, and those who came to his aid, were the joint invisible power which finally secured an appropriation to purchase the ground. Then, after two years of effort, an appropriation to pay for plans. Finally, appropriations from year to year until the work was completed.

This painting which is to be placed in the reception hall of the library portrays with great skill the statesmen who aided the chairman of the special committee. Upon reading their names you will realize what a great committee the Indiana statesman gradually gathered about him. The painting shows two groups, one back of the other. In the first group are Senator Morrill, of Vermont; Senator Butler, of South Carolina; Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts; Senator Voorhees, of Indiana; Senator Randall Lee Gibson, of Louisiana; Senator Cullom, of Illinois; Librarian Spofford; Architect of the Capitol Edward Clark, and Senator Lamar, of Mississippi. In the second group are Senator Warner Miller, of New York; Representative Holman, of Indiana; Senator Bayard, of Delaware; Speaker Carlisle; Senator John Sherman; Representative Charles O'Neill, of Pennsylvania; Representative Bland, of Missouri; Architect Smithmeyer and Representative S. S. ("Sunset") Cox, of New York.

Senator Voorhees spent days and weeks and months and years in efforts to induce those eminent men to become members of his special joint committee on the library. Without powerful aid he could accomplish nothing. He talked to the strongest and best men in both houses of congress, as well as in public speech, until he managed to attract serious attention to the condition of the library, the necessity for its growth and perpetuation. One by one these men came to his side. His greatest difficulty was in securing the active cooperation of Representative Holman, "the great objector," who scrutinized even penuriously every proposed appropriation of money out of the national treasury. When it became known that Mr. Holman was in favor of the new library all of the others who had been inclined to interpose objections withdrew their opposition.

There were 15 members of that special joint committee on the library when the first appropriation was made, and they are named above. Out of that number ten have died. Along with that of Voorhees their portraits and their names will endure with the library. They are Senator Morrill, Senator Voorhees, Senator Gibson, Senator Bayard Senator Sherman, Senator Lamar, Representatives Holman, O'Neill, Bland and Cox. The five members of the committee still living are Senators Hoar, Miller, Cullom and Butler and Representative Carlisle. Senator Hoar and Senator Cullom are the only members of that great committee who are now serving in the congress.

Senator Hoar says: "No man was ever more constantly in earnest about anything in public life than Senator Voorhees was in behalf of that new library project. During the last few years of his life it seemed to be uppermost in all his waking thoughts and aspirations. He never claimed distinction for his work, but he deserved and deserves renown for that prolonged effort in such a good cause."

Senator Cullom says: "It was a pleasure to work with Senator Voorhees on that special committee and on any committee. He was one of the most honest, earnest, energetic men that ever lived. When he took up a law case he never dropped it until the judge and jury had spoken. Likewise, when he undertook to bring about a new building for the congressional library, he kept at it ever, until it was an accomplished fact. Senator Morrill also worked side by side with Senator Voorhees and deserves credit next to the chairman for the achievement."

I have had no more trouble and when one can go to eating mince pie, cheese, candy and nuts after such a time, their digestion must be pretty good. I endorse Kodol Dyspepsia Cure heartily."
