TRAIN SAGGED INTO DITCH

On Williamstown Branch Track, Undermined by Heavy Rainfall

FIREMAN SCALDED BY ESCAPING STEAM

Fortunately the Derailed Train Fell Away from Steep Embankment

Train No. 52, with engine, tender, two freight cars and a passenger coach, figured in a wreck on the Williamstown branch of the Central Vermont road early this morning when a strip of track, measuring some forty feet, undermined by the heavy rains of yesterday, gave way under the weight and sent all but the lone passenger car off the rails.

WIND LIFTS BUILDING OVER MAN'S HEAD

And Carried It Fifty Yards Down Bank, Ira P. Chase of Richford, Who Was in Building, Escaping Because There Was No Floor.

DIED ON RETURN TO BARRE

Alfredo Sironi Arrived from Denver, Colorado, on Christmas Day.

CHILD SCALDED FATALLY

George Henry King Tipped Over Pail of Hot Water.

TAXATION STATISTICS READY

State Commissioner Cushman Has Them for the Legislature.

TRAINMEN FELT TRACK SAG

The outcome of the accident may be considered fortunate, indeed. Not until the engine and tender had traversed the dangerous section that caused the derailment did the trainmen realize that the incessant rain of Thursday night and yesterday had undermined the track.
