The attendance was good and the audience thoroughly appreciative.

—Manager Hatch presented "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" Monday evening to an audience which was just about half the size the merit of the production demanded. Mr. Hatch has made some excellent offerings this season, but it would seem that his efforts to get the best are not thoroughly appreciated. The company presenting this adaptation of John Fox, Jr.'s novel, were excellent actors throughout particularly Frank Ireson, who will be remembered as "Uncle Billy" in "That Printer of Udell's." Mr. Ireson is adapted physically and mentally to play lovable old men's parts to perfection, and his performance as "Uncle Billy" in Monday evening's play was right up to his standard. The rest of the company was well balanced and each rendered his part with artistic correctness. As Huck Finn says, "There may be other shows better than this one, but it's plenty good enough for me, and they'll get my patronage every time they come to a town where I am." (Huck sneaked his way under the tent when no one was looking.)
