As you see a pair of bellows, there is a forced breath without life, so in those that are puffed up with the wind of ostentation there may be charitable words without works—R. Hale.

League Baseball.
That good old American game of baseball is one of the cleanest and most delightful sports a person can engage in. It is interesting, exciting, entertaining, amusing and exhilarating. The efforts of local fans in securing a berth for Clarksburg in the new Western Pennsylvania League will likely result in a successful season of league games in this city in the summer for most all of us seem to be hungry for it.

Those who disapprove of baseball and put their feet down hard upon it as a useless, time-wasting amusement should remember that man as well as boy must have some kind of play; that there must be some amusement for him along with the work; and that this time for amusement and recreation could be spent in many worse diversions than in baseball, and in the main it most likely would in Clarksburg.

Of course league baseball is quite a different thing from the common, every day garden variety of the game that is not conducted under the rules and regulations of a national association. It will be a big undertaking for Clarksburg to support a league team so that it will meet with the success that it should if conditions exist that will retard it in the slightest from having a good, large, unobstructed field and a bright sky overhead in its management. If one or two men get together, hog the whole outfit and try to run the thing to suit their own individual whims and notions there is likely to be too big a demand for rain checks to properly even up things in the box office end of the enterprise. If the fans at large are expected to give the team their moral and financial support they should be invited to take a part in the organization and a voice in the management. Without the good will and the hearty, united support of the fans league baseball will soon run across the foul line into the field of failure and disaster.

If Clarksburg intends to stay in this Western Pennsylvania league—the name ought to be changed—it should stay in with a vim. It should stand pat. Fans should be aroused to the real baseball enthusiasm and every effort to this end should be exerted by the promoters of the enterprise. And Clarksburg should stay there with the determined, unflinching, indomitable hope of winning the pennant which it will if given the proper opportunity and encouragement.

Elopers never think of the cost or the consequences. They usually elope because of what may be termed palpitation of the heart. They think but little, if anything, of what they are undertaking. They seldom do it for romance—but just because the notion seizes them to defy parents, whose consent they can always get. If they become persuasive in the matter. But, still there will be plenty more elopements, notwithstanding the terrible calamity that often befalls the elopers, such as that has happened to the Tacoma girl whose feet were frozen and had to be amputated before the marriage took place. Nor does good advice deter the adventure. But, in the instance of the Tacoma girl, will not the bridegroom reproach himself all the remainder of his mortal life for being the cause of the invalid he now has as his wife? And may he not after tire of a footless wife and desert her?

Speaker Seaman of the West Virginia house of delegates did the right thing—and the people will praise him for it—when he told a lobbyist in the house that he could not insult the intelligence of that body again. The people should demand of the men who run for office that they shall not even recognize a lobbyist, and, there should be a law making it a crime for any one to attempt to lobby, or to use money in the passage of any bill by the legislature. The man who undertakes to use money for the purpose as well as the man who may yield to the influence should be given penal servitude, or some such punishment as will break up the practice of a few men in the State trying to have only such laws as suit them and their interests. The legislator who declares against lobbyists and tries to bring about their obliteration deserves praise just as Speaker Seaman is receiving.

The county commissioners should officially notify the local traction company to place a substantial guard railing or fence around the platform of its Clarksburg-Fairmont Interurban terminal. The county had Glen Elk bridge in good shape with adequate railings on both sides, all the way across until the street car company got the privilege of running the Interurban line upon it and ripped a big slice of the railing away. The platform the traction company put up is practically unprotected by guard railings all the way around which makes a much larger space unprotected than the place from which the traction company ripped the county's railing away. The protection and safety of the traveling public should not be thus neglected.

Although about a month behind date, the first number of The West Virginia Educator, a monthly periodical published by the Educator Publishing Company at Charleston with M. P. Shawkey as managing editor, has reached the Telegram's exchange table. It is quite an interesting publication full of bright optimistic matter relative to the educational interests of the State and it will doubtless accomplish a lot of good in its particular field. Anything that helps the cause of education is all right in the Telegram's opinion and this paper welcomes the new educational publication into West Virginia journalism and hopes it will have a prosperous and fruitful existence.

Speculating on the terrible effects of the awful stench from the Baltimore street quagmire this summer providing the street is not paved before that time, a citizen remarked this morning that he believed the pungent odor would kill all the flies in Clarksburg. This is a philosophical way of finding some good even in the worst things but it is safe to bet that the people would rather suffer the lesser of two evils and have the flies.

Agents of the interests, be they oil or anti-Sunday baseball or whiskey, possibly, may be allowed to lobby in the legislature, but the first one that undertakes to bribe any member of the legislature should be reported to that body, which should immediately proceed to make the matter public by plain condemnation and then have the power to punish him through the regular court proceeding.

Now that the constitutional amendment bill providing for the extension of suffrage to women has been killed in the house of the state legislature, the women lobbyists who were on hand to do what they could in its behalf can now hike back home and look after the children.

It seems quite peculiar that a big blotch has been discovered on the sun and phenomena in the way of thunder and lightning in the midst of a blizzard occur because of it in Pittsburg and no place else in the country.
