

THE YOUSE'S SEAT.

THE SOLDIER'S GRAVE.

There's a white stone placed upon yonder tomb,
Beneath is a soldier lying;
The death-wound came 'mid sword and plume,
When banner and ball were flying.

Yet now he sleeps, the turf on his breast,
By wet wild flowers surrounded;
The church shadow falls o'er his place of rest,
Where the steps of his childhood bounded

There were tears that fell from manly eyes,
There was woman's gentler weeping,
And the wailing of age and infant cries,
O'er the grave where he lies sleeping.

He had left his home in his spirit's pride,
With his father's sword and blessing;
He stood with the valiant side by side,
His country's wrongs redressing.

He came again, in the light of his fame,
When the red campaign was over;
One heart that in secret had kept his name,
Was claimed by the soldier lover.

But the cloud of strife came upon the sky;
He left his sweet home for battle;
And his young child's lip for the loud war-cry,
And the cannon's long death-rattle.

He came again,—but an alter'd man:
The path of the grave was before him,
And the smile that he wore was cold and wan,
For the shadow of death hung o'er him.

He spoke of victory—spoke of cheer—
These are words that are vainly spoken
To the childless mother or orphan's ear,
On the widow whose heart is broken.

A helmet and sword are engrav'd on the stone,
Half hidden by yonder willow;
There he sleeps, whose death in battle was won,
But who died on his own home pillow!

MISCELLANY.

Powerful Effects of Sudden Fear.

Nicolo, Marquis of Ferrara, was taken ill of an ague, which continued so violent that his physicians gave him up, and sent him to a country house he had on the river Po, for change of air. His servant, who loved him with the utmost tenderness, having heard that sudden fear was a sovereign remedy for that complaint, resolved to try it on his master; wherefore, having observed that the Marquis walked every day on the banks of the Po, and knowing it was not deep, he resolved to push him in. He acquainted a miller who lived over against the place, with his design, and having ordered him to be ready with his boat to take his master up, if there should be occasion, the next morning he threw him in, after which he immediately fled to Padua: in the mean time, the miller took up the Marquis, who was indeed thoroughly frightened, and vowed to be revenged.

So extraordinary a case was the subject of general conversation: the Marquis caused his servant to be summoned before the courts of justice, and not appearing he was declared an outlaw, and condemned, if he should ever return, to be beheaded. This news soon reached Padua, notwithstanding which, the servant in a few days came back to Ferrara, and desired admittance to the Marquis, which was denied, and instead thereof, he was apprehended, and ordered to prepare for execution.

The Marquis, however, finding himself cured of his ague, his resentment began to abate, and he was determined to save him, but to seem resolved to let the law take its course. A day was fixed for the execution, and all Ferrara thronged to see it. The servant appeared on the scaffold, and after protesting that he had no other motive than the cure of his master, he laid his head on the block, and gave the fatal signal. The executioner, according to previous orders, at that instant poured cold water on his neck, and this was no sooner done than the color left his cheeks, his eyes sunk in his head, and he died in a few moments without speaking a single word.

SPANISH GALLANTRY.

Peres, the minister and favorite of Philip II. King of Spain, a man of great talents, as we may judge from his writings, reposed all his happiness in the possession of his mistress, who had been deprived of an eye from her birth. All the riches and honors which his royal master had the power to bestow upon a favorite, were light in his estimation, compared to the charms and society of his one-eyed beauty. Philip, almost in love from the description of the lady, obliged Peres to introduce him to her. The king found so much real value in the countenance, illumined by one bright eye only, that he sacrificed his friend and minister. The lady was made the king's mistress. Peres, disgraced at the Court of Madrid, where his friends endeavoured in vain to reconcile him with the sovereign, to whom he had used some harsh expressions, when he found his mistress carried off, retired to France. He was graciously received by Henry IV. Conversing one day with the Minister upon his adventure, King Henry said, he could not understand how a lady deprived of one eye could have so many charms. 'Sire,' replied Peres, 'tis by the providence of Heaven this young lady was born with one eye; with this moiety of natural fire she has put all Spain in combustion; if she had possessed two eyes she would have reduced the world to ashes.'

A PRINTER'S REMARKABLE DREAM.

The Printer of the Farmers' Advocate, says—"We do not pretend to 'believe in dreams,' but we had one a few nights since, of such a singular character, that we cannot resist an inclination to give it publicity. We dreamed, (for printers are subject to dreams,) that all our delinquent subscribers flocked in and paid up their old accounts—consequently, we immediately procured new type from N York, enlarged the Advocate, and paid off the paper-maker. In this we were exceedingly delighted—but just as we were about to render a host of grateful acknowledgments to our patrons, an unlucky, blundering little insect, (which we do think might have found better lodgings,) gave us such a friendly grip between the shoulders, that we awoke, under the dreadful apprehension that the Sheriff had favored us with a call—but 'twas all a dream—all but the bite."

The Countryman and the Beadle.—A short time since one of the beades of this town took a quantity of butter away from a countryman because it was deficient in weight; and meeting him a few days after in a public house, says to him, "You're the man I took twenty pounds of butter from." "No, I bea'nt," replied Hodge. "I am sure you are," says the beadle. "I tell ye I bea'nt," rejoined the countryman, "and if thee lik'st, I'll lay a guinea on't." "Done," replied the beadle, and the money was quickly posted. "Now," said the countryman, "thou didst take away twenty lumps of butter from me, but if there had been twenty pounds, you'd have had no right to take them, and this," continued he, very coolly pocketing the money, "will pay for the loss of the butter."—[Brighton Gaz.]

NOTICE.

THE undersigned contemplate, in a few days, leaving here for the purchase of a full stock of Goods. It is hoped that those indebted to us, in accounts long since due, will take into consideration the great importance of cash in the purchase of goods; and, by an immediate payment, furnish the means of supplying them at the low prices, and on the otherwise accommodating terms, previously tendered. But we are constrained to say, that unless some of our customers more fully comply with the terms of our credit, we shall be compelled to return to our old practice, and sell for cash only.

We with pleasure take this opportunity also, of returning our grateful acknowledgments to many others of our customers, for their liberal patronage and general punctuality, and assure them that although, in some instances, they may have suffered the payment of their accounts to be protracted beyond the usual term, yet we are sensible they had a sufficient cause; but we hope such cause may no longer exist, and that we may be still encouraged to sell to punctual men at 30 days' at cash prices.

Respectfully,
D. A. WEED & CO.
