UPHEAVAL SEEN IN DRYGOODS MARKET

Revival of Demand for Cotton Goods Is Held Probable; Cloths Now Being Bought And Sold by Speculators.

NEW YORK, May 30.—An upheaval of the dry goods market in the next few months, which would affect practically every user and wearer of cotton goods would not surprise some well informed experts closely connected with the textile industry.

Many cotton men believe the government crop estimate to be issued next Monday will place the condition and probable yield even lower than the private reports already made public.

ably will be lowered materially as the season advances and the plants reach the stage where the weevil is damaging. Labor seems sufficient in most sections, but hot, dry weather is regarded as essential.
